FACTS CONFIRMED!

A SPRINGFIELD LADY RECENTLY INTERVIEWED. SHE BELIEVES HER CASE WAS ONE OF THE WORST, BUT NOW FEELS AS WELL AS EVER IN HER LIFE.

"I was so weak when I made my first visit to the doctor's office that I thought I would faint before I reached it. I am very different now, I am happy to say, for I feel as well as ever in my life." Mrs. O. E. Hurley, who resides in Springfield, Mass., made the above remarks when interviewed by the writer. "For five years," continued Mrs. Hurley, "I had been troubled with catarrh. I had all the disagreeable symptons which usually accompany that disease. The least exertion exhausted me. I was greatly annoyed by the constant dropping of mucous into my throat. I had severe attacks of headache and dizziness. My head were felt afraid. Sometimes the ringing noises in my ears were almost unendurable. My stomach became so weak that I could keep nothing on it. I have been a dyspeptic for years, and any kind of solid food distressed me terribly. I had no appetite. I felt tired and languid all the time, and I was unable to attend to my household duties. I could not stand the least exertion, I was so weak. I think that no one could feel worse than I did. I tried almost everything that was recommended, but nothing seemed to give me any relief. I heard of Dr. Royce through the papers and decided at once to consult him. One week after I began taking his medicine I felt a decided change in my condition for the better. My improvement has been gradual and constant until now I am as well as ever. I can eat anything without the slightest inconvenience. The headache and dizziness have entirely gone. There are no more ringing noises in my ears. I have been gaining in flesh constantly. I shall always remember the doctor gratefully for what he has done for me."

Remember Dr. Royce treats all cases for $5 a month, and furnishes all medicines compounded and put up by himself. No two cases get the same medicine, for no two cases are just alike. Dr. Royce may be consulted free of charge at his office, 305½ Main st., Springfield, Mass., from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Patients at a distance successfully treated by mail. Write symptons and receive advice free. 40

The World from the Sidewalk.

Did you ever stand in the crowded street,
In the light of a city lamp,
And list to the tread of the million feet,
In their quaintly musical tramp?
As the surging crowd goes to and fro,
'Tis a pleasing sight, between,
To mark the figures that come and go
In the ever-changing scene.

Here the Publican walks with the Sinner proud,
And the Priest in his gloomy cowl,
And Dives walks by in the motely crowd,
With Lazarus, cheek by jowl;
And the daughter of toil, with her fresh young heart
As pure as her spotless fame,
Keeps step with the woman who makes her mart
In the haunts of sin and shame.

How lightly trips the country lass
In the midst of the city's ills,
As freshly pure as the daisied grass
That grows on her native hills;
And the beggar, too, with hungry eye,
And lean, wan face, and crutch,
Bestows a blessing on the passer-by,
As he gives him little or much.

When Time shall have beaten the day's tattoo,
And in dusky armor night
Is treading with echoless footstep through
The gloom of the silent street,
Some few of these shall be daintily fed
And sink to slumbers sweet,
While many go to a sleepless bed
With never a crumb to eat!

Ah, me! when the hours go joyful'y by,
How little we stopped to heed
Our brothers' and sisters' despairing cry
In their woe and bitter need.
Yet such a world as the angels sought
This world of ours we'd call,
If the brotherly love our Father taught
Was felt by each for all.

Yet a few years more, and this motley throng
Will all have passed away,
And the rich, and poor, and old, and young,
Will be undistinguished clay;
And the lips that laugh, and the lips that moan,
Will in silence alike be sealed,
And some will rest under stately stones,
And some in the potter's field.

But the sun will be shining just as bright,
And so will the silver moon,
And just such a crowd will be there at night,
And just such a crowd at noon;
And men will be wicked and women will sin,
As ever since Adam's fall,
With the same wide world to labor in,
And the same God over all.

MISS ESPERANZA O'SHEA.

It was just on the stroke of nine. The lower balcony of the Casino was crowded, and even on the broad stretch of stone pavement the chairs were so close the passer-by had to pick his way, politely mindful of women's trains and men's feet. Outside the sea wall the ocean lay long and level, part of it paled by moonlight, and here and there on its darker expanse specked with the small, steady lights of anchored yachts. The scene was picturesque—a black arch spanning a moonlit roadway, a gate-tower, dark against the sky, with a round, bright moon shining over its shoulder, a glimmering of white waves seething about broken rocks. From the corner of the balcony where the musicians sat floated the strains of Wolfram's "Song to the Evening Star," with its undertone of ineffable, piercing sadness.

It was just at this propitious moment that the crowd at the far end of the balcony became aware that the crowd at the end near the main entrance were enjoying a sensation. The was a rustle of crushed silk as the women moved in their chairs, a universal turning of heads, a raising of girls' lorgnettes, an adjusting of men's glasses, a murmurous intermingling of queries and then a running fire of comment, not too carefully suppressed —"Well, did you ever!—Who are they, for pity's sake? Has she ever been here before? Where are they from? Did you say it was an actress!" And all the heads slowly revolved on the craned necks as all the eyes turned to follow three new arrivals walk down the bacony.

Miss Esperanza O'Shea had often been stared at, but never to this extent. As a Californian, a beauty and an heiress, she had known what it was to be looked upon with curiosity, admiration and envy. But she had never before left her native State, hence she had never been subjected to the broad, bold, unwinking stare of the cultured East. Neverth less she bore it with the impassive aplomb of one born and bred in its fierce, bright glare, and, at the head of the family, walked slowly down the long veranda, the little cortege trotting at her heels, as it had done, figuratively speaking, ever since she had been old enough to walk at all.

Miss O'Shea invariably led her family in all things. She had done so since her tenderest years. Her papa, a big, florid, grizzled man, in a high gray hat and a loosely hanging gray suit, always obeyed Esperanza. As to her mamma, she was a Mexican, and though she had lived for twenty years under the shadow of our hospitable flag, she had never been able to master the intricacies of our complicated language, and could therefore hardly be expected to guide the steps of her extremely self-confident daughter.

Close upon the musicians Miss O'Shea paused, her dark circled eyes falling upon three vacant chairs. She indicated them with the gesture of one used to command, and her obedient parents silently seated themselves. Mr. O'Shea took off his hat, ran a fat, short-fingered hand through his grizzled hair and respired the sea-air, then turned his eyes inward and made no sound. Mrs. O'Shea, whom the lights revealed to be a dark, fat, waistless, formless lady with ink black hair and a mustache, the possession of which would have made the heart of a sophomore sing, indulged in a few soft Spanish mutterings, and went to sleep with the promptitude of one who knows what is expected of a well-trained Spanish mother. Miss O'Shea alone remained alert and wakeful, and gave the crowd stare for stare.

It was not surprising that a crowd should stare at this brilliant young lady. She was made up with an open and unblushing frankness that bespoke ignorance of the popular prejudice against this form of decoration. Rice powder was thick on the bridge of her nose. There was pink on her cheeks and red on her nose. Her hair, curled down to her eyebrows, was bleached a bright bronze-red. She was tall and well-formed, with square, broad shoulders and tiny waist. Her foot, peeping from the hem of her skirt in a white kid slipper worked with gold, was by no means small. Neither were her hands, but they were white as milk, beautifully shaped and covered with superb rings. As to her dress, it was an indescribably gorgeous creation of white and gold, with a bodice of dead white suede braided from neck to waist-line in gold arabesques. But neither paint, powder, nor bad dressing could hide that she was handsome and young.

"Where on earth had she come from?" breathed the crowd, with the wide eyes of lively amazement.

Had this query been put directly to Miss O'Shea she would have answered with unruffled good humor that she had come straight from California for the purpose of "having a good time." Her father, too, had thought that she ought to have a good time, she would have continued with the charming frankness of eighteen—not a New York or Boston or even a Chicago eighteen, but a California eighteen, an eighteen that had gleaned its experience of men and manners from life on a ranch at Merced, varied during the last two years by winters in the town-house in Sacramento.

After a serious perusal of the papers, Esperanza O'Shea had come to the conclusion that Narragansett Pier was the best place to go to in pursuit of the vaguely specified good time. Moreover, it appeared to be a place where a dazzling wardrobe would meet an intelligent appreciation. At breakfast one morning Esperanza announced her intention of spending the summer there.

"All right, Epsy," said Mr. O'Shea, "I'll telegraph for rooms to-day."

"Si, si," murmured the Senora O'Shea, raising the heavy eyelids that once shaded the finest eyes in Mexico, and casting a sleepy glance at her daughter, "yez, cettanly, of cos," and then once more she relapsed into smiling somnolence.

The wardrobe did its work at Narraganset Pier, if its work was to make its wearer stared at, talked about, and grudgingly admired. It was certainly a remarkable one. In a place of remarkable wardrobes it made its mark, had its own niche with the other wardrobes, and its share in the day's talk. Miss O'Shea wore it with an impassive front, and greatly enjoyed the sensation it created. As a wordrobe to be stared at it was a brilliant success. On its own ground none of the other wardrobes could compare with it. Arrayed in one of its masterpieces no one was so conspicuous, no one as gorgeous, no one, truth to tell, despite the powder, the paint, was as handsome as Esperanza O'Shea.

But there is admiration and admiration. The unsophisticated Esperanza had not grasped this fact. That the glances and stares of one of the most ill-bred crowds in the country were not all admiring did not enter her simple mind for some time. That people were slow in extending the right hand of fellowship to her she did feel with a slowly dawning, hurt surprise. It never occurred to her that any one could possibly object to making the acquaintance of a young lady because she had red-gold hair when nature meant her to have dark brown, or plastered her ligs with a crimson glue for all the world to see.

But Eastern people were not very friendly. She announced this with the customary candor of the Californians to a lady who sat next her at table. The lady said: "No, they were not expansive," and then smiled and drifted out of the dining room, and afterward proved to be one of the least expansive of the people toward whom Esperanza made friendly overtures.

Yes, they were very stiff. She sat in the Casino every evening with her papa and mamma and nobody came to talk to her. Up in the tower, with its stone supports black against the horizon, the red electric lights showed friendly, cheerful, merry people sitting in groups, and sometimes sipping cool drinks at the little round tables. Their laughter floated down and mingled with the faint washing of the waves on the rocks. They undoubtedly were having a good time. So were the people on the balcony and the paved terrace, drawn together in little gay, chattering parties from which the breeze bore scraps of sentences and the light, high laughter of women. Esperanza envied them with the pent-up intensity of her eighteen years. Silent, between her silent patents, she looked at the gay groups around her with her eyes full of a childish and pathetically candid envy.

"Don't seem to me, Espy," said her father, suddenly, "as if you were having such a rattling time."

"Well, not exactly, popper," she said, heaving up a great sigh from the bottom of her pensively covetous heart, "but maybe I'll get there later."

The next evening the O'Shea party resolved to try a change, and ascended to the tower. It was even gayer than usual. Groups sat about at the round tables, sipping chilled liquors in tall tumblers in which two blackberries, a raspberry and a slice of lemon lay on top of the cracked ice. A long steam yacht, which had run into port a few hours before, was now only vaguely distinguishable, but its lights pierced the darkness, moving with the moving swells. Its blue-coated white-trousered yachtsmen roamed the Casino, occasionally stopping to greet friends.

At 10 the silent O'Sheas picked up their wraps and departed for their hotel, which was close by the Casino. But as they emerged from that building Esperanza, who had been struggling with her long cloak of white silk, discovered she had carried away the cape of the lady who had sat next her. She remembered having seen it on the chair beside her, and recollected throwing her own cloak over it. Calling to her parents to go on, that she had forgotten something, and would join them directly, she hurried back to the tower. But the lady and her friends had already gone.

Not finding its owner, Esperanza gave the cape to one of the waiters loitering about, then slowly retraced her steps toward the corridors. There were only a few people now in the tower and gallery, and these were mostly couples who had tucked themselves away in corners and were enjoying murmured conversation. Miss O'Shea, smiling to herself, looked over into the road to see if she could catch a glimpse of her parents, then trailed her long skirts of pale blue brocade along the passage to the stairhead.

As she reached this a quick step on the veranda outside announced the approach of a man. Miss O'Shea dreamily speculated that he must have seen her as she walked down the gallery. With her fingers extended for the balustrade she turned and saw him enter, then pause and look at her. He was a tall, handsome man in the dark blue coat, white duck trousers and blue peaked cap of a yachtsman. He wore eye-glasses, and looked somewhere in the vicinity of thirty. His face, as he stood there looking at her, left upon her memory a lasting impression.

Then, as she extended her foot for the first step, he took off his hat and said, smiling: "How do you do. Isn't it a lovely evening?"

She was startled and made vaguely uncomfortable by this unexpected address. Looking at him in frank astonishment, she murmured a hesitating—"Yes, lovely," and was about to continue her descent, when he drew a step closer and said:

"Don't go back yet. Let's go into the tower and have an absinthe frappe."

Miss O'Shea stopped on the step and made no further attempt to descend. The words themselves made little impression on her. She had seen men and women this very evening sitting in the tower drinking absinthe frappe, creme de menthe and sherry cobblers. In the manner of the man lay the sting. Even Miss O'Shea, with her limited range of experience and her beautiful large belief in mankind's invariable chivalrous intention, felt it.

And then she forgot the little, the very little training she had ever received; forgot what Dr. Watts tells us about our hands not being made for the purpose of tearing each other's eyes, forgot that the only weapon society allows a lady is her tongue, forgot, indeed, what society says a lady is, and what it maintains she should always be, and a great wave of fury swept over her. The fiery blood of Indian and Spaniard rushed dark into her face, the fierce spirit of her Castilian forefathers who had conquered a world with Cortez, burst once more into life. With the colored fan in her hand she struck the smiling face a stinging blow. The fan sticks snapped, the bronzed skin beneath them crimsoned. Smothering a furious ejaculation, the man threw a hand over his cheek and eye, and Miss O'Shea, panting and darkly flushed, swept down the stairs.

Then as she hurriedly descended he, smarting with pain, his anger surging, hurled himself on the balustrade and looked over at her. All he saw was the toss of her red-gold head, the wavering pulse of diamonds that trembled through her hair, the long sweep of her pale-blue satin dress, the ivory nape of her neck where the pearl necklace fastened with a sapphire clasp. The next moment she had passed out of sight, and he heard her rapid, decisive step on the balcony below.

He turned back, intending to watch her from the upper veranda, but in the doorway met a friend who accosted him with a jocular:

"Hullo, Beverwyk, what have you been running into?"

"Oh, I turned suddenly to look at that woman just gone down stairs, and ran into the door; thought both doors were open—hurts like the devil," returned the other glibly.

And arm-in-arm they passed down the veranda, murmuring together and laughing.

When Miss O'Shea got back to the hotel her breath had regained its usual evenness, her color had gone down, but her eyes were brilliant under their lowered lids. Her father sat in the darkened sitting-room in his shirt-sleeves with his high hat on—his habitual costume when at ease in the house. When she came in, tossed her cloak on a chair, and stood silently pulling off her gloves, he regarded her for a moment or two, then said, as if the idea had just struck him:

"Where've you been all this time?"

"Oh, I just went back to return that lady's cape. I gave it to a waiter. It was all right." She tore off her gloves and stretched and bent her plump fingers, turning round her rings.

"Look here, pop," she said, twisting the "marquise" on her little finger back into place, "I guess we'd better leave this place."

"Well, I guess so, too," said the old man, mildly. "Guess you don't like it much, Espy?"

"I don't belong here," she said, with a sort of rough shyness. "I'm different."

The old man extended his hand and drew her up to him.

"You'll do," he said, fondly patting the velvety hand.

"Maybe I will for you," she answered, with the same air of dogged embarrassment, "but I'm too different. It's not comfortable."

Whether Mr. O'Shea understood or not, he queried no further. He patted the smooth hand in silence, then he said:

"Well—what do you want to do?"

"I want to go to Europe for a long time—a year. I want to know things. I don't want to be so different."

"Well, now, Espy," said the old man, deprecatingly, then, as two soft arms went round his neck, he added: "But you can go if you want."

Two weeks later the O'Shea family sailed from New York on the Umbria.

Once arrived in the effete monarchies, Miss Esperanza O'Shea went seriously, if a little blindly, to work to reconstruct herself. She went to a school in Paris and stayed there all winter. Her companions showed no surprise at her presence. They had heard she was an American from California, which in the effete monarchies explains many things. In their refining society Miss O'Shea was gradually restored to her original self. Her red-gold locks went through as many changes of hue as the dying dolphin, but at length arrived safely on the homeward path at the deep dark brown of nature. She put away all the little pots of red and white that had made her dressing-table look like that of an old belle who dies hard. A very demure phœnix began to rise from the ashes of the once gorgeous Esperanza O'Shea.

With the native shrewdness of the women of the West who make their own positions and fight their own fortunes she was quick to see and adopt the style and manners of the young girls about her. By the spring the elaborate beauty who had created a sensation at the Narragansett Casino had passed from phase to phase of a subduing process, and compared to her old self was as a wren to a peacock. Instead of looking like a woman of thirty years she now looked like what she was—a girl of twenty—a tall, ivory-pale, velvet-eyed girl with a thick coil of smooth, uncurled dark hair, and a stately carriage, such as romance writers are fond of ascribing to princesses. The Parisians thought her very foreign and picturesque. She looked like Don Sol or Elvira—all she wanted was the dusky droop of the mantilla shadowing the warm pallor of her cheeks, a black curl on her temple, a red rose in her hair.

The elaborating process did not finish at Paris. Mrs. O'Shea took her family and governess traveling. They "did" Europe with couriers and libraries of books or travel, and the governess, who, in some embarrassment, called herself "a companion." They studied art in Italy and music in Germany. The governess was almost worked to death, but the pupil, insatiable in her desire to be as ornate as the young person of any place or any country, would permit no respite. They met a good many people, too. Miss O'Shea began to be spoken of as the great beauty and heiress of the American colonies of different capitals. French noblemen, that she had never seen, wrote to her offering their hearts, hands and coronets. English noblemen followed her about meditating proposals, but German noblemen generally proposed to her on the first meeting. Before her return to New York, after a three-years' absence, her coming was heralded with a flourish of newspaper trumpets, that crowded into small type in an obscure corner the arrival of Herr Glumberg, the most eminent of German anthropologists, who crossed on the same steamer.

As the immortal Begum would say, the O'Sheas were "took up" in New York. Our patriotic metropolis is always glad to know any one with the approval of the effete monarchies. It had heard of the foreign noblemen and it immediately proceeded to light its taper before the shrine. Miss O'Shea was pronounced a very wonderful young woman, perfect in her style, distingue, singularly simple, sweet and fine, and true. Such a dazzling creature had never before come out of the West. She knew everything, spoke half a dozen languages, played four musical instruments. Rumor wasn't sure that she didn't play two at the same time. Her parents came in for a little of the general approbation. Society characterized Mrs. O'Shea as a most cultivated woman, and when she fell asleep before its eyes said that "her manner was marked by a truly Southern repose."

But the crown of the O'Shea's glory was reached when it became evident that Beverwyk Van Duyvil had succumbed to the charms of the beautiful Esperanza. To understand what this really meant one ought to know that Beverwyk Van Duyvil was the last of the Van Duyvils—that illustrious family, which, tradition says, was one of the few families that before settling in New Amsterdam enjoyed distinction in the mother country. The Van Duyvils had never been butchers or bakers, or even shoemakers. There was therefore, nothing left for them to be but gentlemen of leisure or governors.

The last representative of this honored line was very rich, very much of a person, not a german leader or a ball organizer, but a man of parts and positions. He had never so far forgotten the glory of the Van Duyvils as to pay addresses to any but first families in Boston and Philadelphia. New York women did not meet with his approbation. And now he sighed at a pair of Californian feet that had once run bare and brown on the dusty by-roads about Merced.

Even old O'Shea was flattered in his pride. His sturdy democratic heart could not subdue a throb of vanity when he thought that the sole survivor of the house of O'Shea—recently discovered to be descended from the kings of Waterford—should mate with the last representative of the house of Van Duyvil. The only person who remained haughtily indifferent was the young lady herself. She was distant and cold to her suitor, rarely spoke of him, made excuses not to see him, was out when he called. It would not have been strange if Beverwyk Van Duyvil had felt discouraged by the attitude of his lady fair. But to be a Van Duyvil means more things than to be mer

Three Months for 25 Cents.

To any one who is not now a subscriber to this paper, it will be sent three months on trial on receipt of 25 cents.

GOVERNOR RUSSELL has been asked to commute the sentence of Holmes, the Chicopee wife murderer, to imprisonment for life.

NORTHAMPTON had a New Year's gift of the $100,000 academy of music which was built last year by E. H. R. Lyman of New York.

THE county commissioners have appointed James R. Wells of Springfield registrar of deeds in place of James E. Russell, recently resigned.

BARRETT secures his reelection as speaker of the House, and Lodge makes sure of the senatorship. There were better men to be had for both places.

WARDEN LOVERING of the state prison seems to have a hard time of it, take it all around. Now the prison commissioners want to know why it cost $8724 over the receipts to run the institution last year, when the year before there was a profit of $10,079.

WHITELAW REID, the recently retired representative of this government in France, has been honored by the French people in the presentation, through its minister in Washington, of a handsome Sevres vase, accompanied by expressions of regret at his resignation.

THE manufacture of the souvenir half dollars for the World's Fair is going on at the rate of 20,000 a day. They are said to be quite pleasing in design, but at present they command a premium of fifty cents. And there is only about 30 cents worth of silver in one of them.

THE end of the Iron Hall is not yet. Supreme Justice Somerby and other officers of the order have been arrested at Philadelphia on a charge of "conspiring to cheat and defraud with unlawfully using the money belonging to the order and with hindering and obstructing the administration of justice."

GOVERNOR RUSSELL seems determined that Irving B. Sayles of Millbury shall be savings bank commissioner if there is a possibility of reaching that end, having sent his nomination to the council again yesterday. Mr. Sayles, it will be remembered, was refused a confirmation by the council twice last year.

BOSTON is contemplating with pride the prospect of increased and more direct communication with European countries, and the consequent passing through the city of more freight and passengers. Two of the Cunard steamers are to run to that port, and improved terminal facilities for both boats and railroads are to be furnished at East Boston.

THE Cunard steamer Umbria, about which much anxiety had been felt for several days, came into port at New York last Saturday, having been 12½ days from Queenstown, the longest trip on record for an ocean racer. When five days out the shaft broke, and the vessel became helpless. It was picked up and taken in tow by another steamer, but the towing hawser broke in the night during heavy weather and in the morning the friend of the night before had disappeared, having been obliged to proceed for her own safety. After drifting for four days the shaft was finally repaired and the engines started at half speed, which was continued until port was reached, the credit for the performance being due to Chief Engineer Tomlinson, by whose skill the shaft was repaired. The vessel was in no danger at any time, and there was little or no anxiety among the passengers. Extremely rough weather has been experienced by the ocean liners this winter, and three of them, the Spree, Noordland and Umbria, have broken their shafts, though all were not so fortunate as the latter, the Spree having a narrow escape from going to the bottom.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.

Governor Russell's third address to the Legislature is not a long one, and is devoted mainly to the policy of reform, principally on lines recommended by himself, some of them before this year. He says: "In accordance with well-established custom, it is my duty at this time to submit to you suggestions and recommendations for your consideration and action. This duty I consider to be a privilege to deal with broader matters than the specific recommendations of departments, however important these may be, and to suggest principles of legislation and necessary reforms, rather than perfunctorily to indorse or transmit details of administration, all of which are ably and fully set forth in the reports of state officials made directly to you.

After speaking of some of his recommendations for the past two years which have been adopted, he recommends legislation to "define the objects of expenditures for campaign purposes, and to restrict its amount; and the most stringent treatment by law, on the lines heretofore suggested by me, of the evil of the lobby, so as to obviate its necessity, take away its opportunity, and give publicity to its acts. I also commend to your consideration the justice of giving the same recognition upon the official ballot to any well-established and regularly organized political party as is now given to the leading political parties; and the expediency of repealing the law permitting a recount of ballots."

The recommendation of the abolition of the governor's council is made again, after "another year's experience has only shown more clearly the danger, friction and irresponsibility of our present system; the absence of proper power in the governor, and so of responsible control in the people," and he renews the recommendation that the people be given a chance to vote on the matter.

He would have the board of prison commissioners removed and the prison brought nearer the executive by giving "the warden control of his subordinate officers, the board of prison commissioners control of him, and the governor control of them," whereas now, "the warden has no power over his principal subordinates, except with the concurrence of the board of prison commissioners. They have no power whatever over him, and the governor little, if any, over them."

Whenever and wherever possible he would have the right of local self-government left in or restored to the cities and towns of the commonwealth; the Boston police commission he would abolish; relief from special legislation in matters relating to towns, corporations, etc., is asked for by the enactment of more general laws, by which such matters would be placed under the control of the state; a law providing for the sale of all new railroad stock at auction is suggested. The matter of sewage in the section about Boston is touched upon, as well as the question of rapid transit in that city, parks, water supply and highways, in the latter of which he sees "evident demand for improvement, and of more systematic, uniform methods in their construction and maintenance." "Wise, progressive legislation to promote the welfare of the farmer, the wage-earner and all the people" is demanded. The mustering of the militia at the World's Fair is favored, and the Torrens system of registration of land titles commended. He would abolish Fast Day, as the day has "come to be generally disregarded, or deflected from its original and grateful purpose. It has become little else than a holiday. It seems inconsistent with sound public and religious sentiment, and almost irreverent, to require a day to be set apart by public proclamation to a most solemn purpose, when it is well known that it will not be so observed."

The establishment of closer trade relations with Canada as benefiting Massachusetts are touched upon, and a resolution to Congress favoring it recommended.

The Agricultural Society's Premium List.

The directors of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society held a meeting Tuesday and revised the premium list for the fair next fall, some decided changes being made. The rule adopted last year of requiring stock entries to be made three days before the exhibition was found to work so well that the time was increased to five days, so as to give time for the advertising of what may be found on the grounds. The regulation which prevented an exhibitor from drawing more than one premium in a class in which he was the only exhibitor was removed. The matter of expert judges has provoked some criticism in the past two years, and this year an expert will be employed on poultry only. The classes for working oxen of any age and for fancy trained steers are dropped, and a sweepstakes for the best yoke of oxen of any age offered, and a new class made for walking oxen, to walk once around the track. The classes and premiums then remain practically the same until class 15, poultry, is reached. Only two birds of a kind will be required, instead of three, as formerly, and each pair must pay an entrance fee of 10 cents. Among horses new classes are made for brood mares and colts for road and trotting purposes. The premiums for the matched pairs of carriage horses are increased, and the time of the members' trotting class is made four minutes. The trotting classes are 2.45, 2.35 and free-for-all. The colt-stake races, which attracted so much interest last year, are retained, but the society does not offer quite so much money, $25 less in each class. In vegetables, grain and fruits the premiums for the best collections are materially increased, as are also the premiums offered for flowers. The awards for bread, cake and honey are doubled, and more money is given the departments of fancy articles, fine arts and domestic manufactures. The directors were emphatically in favor of renovating the upper hall, and it is probable that it will be sheathed and painted. An effort will be made to have Governor Russell present one day of the fair. Members are to be admitted free the first day, while the second day every adult, members included, will pay 35 cents.

A Sensational "Fake."

Somewhat of a breeze has been stirred up in town the past week by a story that Deputy Sheriff Healey had been taking bribes from illegal liquor sellers. The story is told by John Riley of Thorndike, who was raided by Healey, a seizure made, and such good evidence secured that Riley was convicted and fined $100. He promised to go out of business and the court reduced the fine to $25. He says that in 1891, when there was no license, other illegal sellers in Thorndike came to him and asked a contribution toward a purse which was to insure a "tip" from Healey, who was the officer employed by the prosecuting board, whenever a raid was to be made. He declined, preferring to run his chances, with the result above stated, while all who chipped in were notified in time. The sum subscribed is set at $1000. To any one who knows Mr. Healey the story is most absurd. The position occupied by him has seldom been filled by a more conscientious or painstaking man, and there are few, even among those who differ with him politically, who will give such a story serious thought. Yet Sheriff Clark was visited Monday by a reputable citizen of this place who strongly opposed the reappointment of Mr. Healey, his only reason being that this story had been told to him. It is a sorry state of affairs in a community if a faithful record of six years such as Mr. Healey has can be set at naught by the unsupported word of a convicted illegal liquor seller. There is no better evidence of good service on the part of an officer than his disfavor with criminals, and this opposition to Mr. Healey shows plainly that the illegal sellers of Thorndike, where there are supposed to be quite a number of them, are opposed to his reappointment.

The Year at the Baptist Church.

The adjourned annual meeting of the Baptist church was held Monday evening, the business meeting being preceded by a social reunion and supper at which there was a full attendance, the members improving this first opportunity to become acquainted with the new pastor and his wife. Some of the non-resident members were present to share in the enjoyment of the occasion, and at the roll call 54 responded in person, 18 through friends and 6 by letter. The clerk's report showed that 6 members had been received by baptism during the year, 1 by letter, 1 by experience and 1 restored, while 4 had been dismissed by letter, 2 had died and 2 were erased, leaving the present membership at 111, of whom 76 are resident. The report of the treasurer revealed a debt of something over $200, and before the meeting adjourned $155 was pledged toward its payment, and it is hoped to raise the balance very soon. Brief reports were read from the Sunday school, young people's society, mission circle, mission band and ladies' society, and the following officers were elected for the present year: Clerk and treasurer, Chas. B. Fiske; collector, N. W. Chandler; executive committee, C. E. Fuller, E. B. Taylor, G. W. Camp, J. H. Shaw, C. B. Fiske; prudential committee, the pastor and deacons, C. Moulton, Mrs. J. C. Rich; baptismal committee, A. E. Fitch, W. Rhodes, Mrs. C. Moulton, Mrs. G. W. Camp, Mrs. C. E. Fuller; auditing committee, A. C. Campbell, J. J. Prentiss; soliciting committee, Mrs. C. B. Fiske, Mrs. L. G. Parkhurst, Mrs. E. G. Buss, Mrs. P. M. Shearer.

A. Wheeler, S. E. Prentiss, E. G. Ward, B. F. Moore, Miss E. M. Fullington and Dr. E. Gable. Besides interesting and instructive books, the daily papers and other periodicals will be at the disposal of the club, and it is evident that the boys take much pleasure in being members.

There is a feeling among the leading singers in town that when they are called upon to furnish music for funerals they should be paid for their services, except in cases where people are unable to do so. The custom is practiced in all the cities and most of the larger towns, the price usually paid being $2 for each person.

Dr. W. H. Stowe and O. P. Allen went to Worcester Wednesday to get points on the matter of shelves and cases for the historical collection soon to be added to the library. They visited several institutions and at one found a system which is about what is wanted here. The fund for the cases now amounts to $137.

The first farmers' institute of the season will be held in the district court room next Thursday, when John E. "Joshua Simpkins" was presented to a good-sized audience at the opera house last Saturday night, and was the best play of its kind which has visited the town lately. There is in all such plays a tendency to overdo the parts which are intended to be funny until the majority of the audience tires of the "horse play." The sawmill scene was a very realistic one.

The reply postals have been received at the post office. They are about twice the size of the large ones, and are made to fold, the address and message to be written on one half, and the return address on one side of the other half. The card is then folded and mailed. The receiver tears off the used half, writes his reply on the blank side of the other part and mails it.

The first of the series of letters from Boston on the doings of the Legislature, written by a long resident in Boston who has intimate acquaintance with men and matters about the state house, appears in another column. They will appear weekly until the close of the Legislature, and by them the reader can keep a pretty good run of the doings of that august body.

The miniature insurrection at the poor farm has been put down, and the inmates do what is demanded of them when it is asked. They were given their choice of doing this or going to the state workhouse, and chose to accept the conditions here. Some of the men have been in the habit of straying out whenever they have felt like it, and have been supplied with liquor by parties at Palmer Center, their condition not always being the best on their return. This has also been stopped by prohibiting their absence without leave.

There is a prospect that the telegraph office in the passenger station will be moved. The officials of the road have been considering the matter for three years, but were out one day this week to look over the ground. The present office is rather dark, and the plan is to move it to the front of the building, taking in one of the windows. The counter of the depot restaurant would then be extended across the corner of the space now occupied by the telegraph office, giving more and better counter room. When the work will be done is not known.

The marriage of William E. McDonald, bookkeeper for the Flynt Building and Construction Company, and Miss Mary E. Cantwell of Monson, is announced to take place in Monson on the 17th. Mr. McDonald has been in the employ of the Flynt company for a number of years, and during his residence in Palmer has made hosts of friends who will wish him every happiness in his new relationship. The bride is a well-known and popular young lady of the town in which she resides. Mr. and Mrs. McDonald will board at the Weeks House through the winter.

Postmaster Knox had a small supply of the new Columbian one and two-cent stamps yesterday, having sent to the office at Springfield for them, but they were all soon disposed of. There is a great demand for them, and the small offices may have to wait some time before they obtain a supply. They are an inch wide by 1⅝ inches long, printed with a light mauve color, with a clear-cut engraving of the landing of Columbus. The one-cent stamps look very much like a special delivery, and are very likely to be mistaken for such in the hurry of the mails.

One of the favored contestants for the office of deputy sheriff proved to be Selectman W. H. Brainerd, and his appointment occasioned no little surprise to the majority of the people, as it was not generally known he was after the place. But some quiet work had been done and the plum fell into his hat. The other, for Palmer usually has two, has not yet been appointed. Some ugly stories have been afloat this week regarding one of the aspirants, and Sheriff Clark is somewhat at a loss to know just what to do. He proposes to look the ground over personally before he decides, and will visit Palmer the early part of next week and give a hearing in the matter.

At the probate court in Springfield Wednesday the following business was transacted: Administration granted in the estates of—Sally Crocker, late of Hampden, O. Louis Wolcott administrator; Edward P. Tuthill was chosen deacon for three years in place of Hubbard Lawrence, who declined to serve. These officers were chosen: First assistant superintendent of the Sunday school, W. A. Breckenridge; second assistant, Mrs. H. E. Huntley; secretary and treasurer, Harold Shaw; librarian, Robert Stebbins; standing committee of the church, O. P. Allen, J. H. Tuthill, H. B. Knox, Mrs. A. E. Park, Mrs. C. W. Bennett, Mrs. J. H. Kenerson; committee for visiting strangers and the sick, Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock, Mrs. L. M. Burleigh, Mrs. J. B. Shaw, Mrs. G. H. Wilkins, Mrs. J. W. There are many Palmer people who would like to see Joseph Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle" next Thursday evening at the Court Square theater in Springfield. They can do so by staying over night in the city; or the Boston and Albany road will run a special train out after the performance for $40. This is the only thing it will do. Nothing will be done in the way of a car on the rear of a freight train, or allowing the trip to be made in the jumper of a freight, without the trouble of putting on an extra car. Just why the road should be so unaccommodating in such matters does not appear on the surface. To secure a special train and not make the fare greater than the regular amount requires the guarantee of 56 passengers, and that is rather a large number to draw from a town of this size for every entertainment. It does not seem as though the attaching of a car to the rear of a freight could be a very serious inconvenience, and it would greatly accommodate theater goers if they could have this once in a while. It certainly looks as though the Boston and Albany road, being in a position where it was not obliged to cater to its local patrons, had its thumb to its nose and was letting its patrons make the best of it.

The moonlight and good ice have made a combination that cannot be excelled for skating. It would have been perfect if it had not been for the hard wind. As it was, Lily pond has been covered with skaters the past few nights.

A good story is being told on one of the local sports. A few days ago he with several others went fishing, and had the misfortune to break through the ice, possibly because of his weight. The water was only waist deep, but he shouted lustily for help. The bank must have been pretty steep, for he said he did not dare try and climb out for fear he would get in over his head.

Joseph Geer, F. Lavine and Mr. Barnes were appointed a committee to attend to the interests of the class during the present year, and have made arrangements for a lecture course, to be given under the auspices of the class, consisting of two lectures, and old folks' concert and an evening of elocution. John R. Clark of Buffalo, N. Y., and Dr. Pitblado of Hartford, Ct., will probably be the lecturer.

Residents on East Main street were amused a few evenings since at the way in which a young couple offered their devotions to Venus, and others were treated to an object lesson in affection. The loved and lover were both from out of town, and were visiting friends here. Desirous of finding a secluded spot where they would be free from the prying gaze of others, they chose a promenade on the road leading to Springfield from East Main street, and by their actions evidently had no thought of the moon, which was an undimmed spectator of the scene. The frequency and fervor of the osculatory demonstration was convincing evidence that the principals thought themselves the only ones in the vicinity, and after their return to their respective places of abode the beauties of a moonlight stroll were emphatically commented upon.

Fines of $600 have been paid during the last six months as the result of illegal liquor selling in Wales. ### HOLLAND.

The remains of James F. Lynn, who died in Springfield Christmas day, were brought to town and interred last week Wednesday. Mr. Lynn was the last of his father's family, three having died within the space of about three months, aged respectively 82, 84 and 86. All were born in the same house and have lived in town most of their lives.

The town hall was filled with an appreciative audience on the evening of December 29th to listen to a free entertainment given for the benefit of the J. Arthur Johnson post of the G. A. R. The exercises consised of songs, solos, ballads and duets, both sentimental and comic. Miss H. R. Blodgett presided at the organ, while G. W. Bagley and wife, assisted by A. J. Bagley, did most of the singing, receiving hearty encores. W. P. Holden of East Brimfield showed himself no novice in the art of elocution by his rendering of a piece entitled "The Wounded." The continued applause called him to the platform the second time. The closing act on the stage was a short farce, which called forth much merriment. Then commenced the sale of the baskets generously provided by the ladies, containing all manner of nicetes for the palate. The owner's name was inside the basket, and after the sale each buyer hunted up the lady who gave the basket and they sat down together to partake of the contents. Hot coffee was furnished gratuitously, and plenty of ice cream could be had by paying for it. While the people were satisfying their hunger a squash was circulated among the audience, giving an opportunity to guess on the number of seeds it contained at ten cents a guess. The one who came the nearest to the right number was to receive a glass set. D. E. Webber was the lucky man and obtained the prize on a guess of 280 seeds, there being 290. The whole proceeds of the entertainment amounted to $44.87.

WARREN.

Mrs. Albert Whitney is visiting in Brooklyn.

Mrs. Wilson Fairbanks is suffering from an attack of rheumatism.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Tarbell were guests of Dr. Charles Deland Monday.

Miss Emma Ramsdell is the guest of Mrs. Frank Strickland in Springfield.

Mrs. Jameson and daughter of Cambridge are guests of Mrs. E. F. Strickland.

The funeral of Mr. Rice was held at his late home on Bacon street Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Twichell and son of Hartford have been spending a few days in town.

Mr. and Mrs. Jenks were called to Pascoag, R. I., last week by the illness of Mrs. Sayles.

Meetings are being held throughout the week at the Methodist and Congregational churches.

The ladies of the Congregational church will hold their annual New Year's supper at the chapel next Tuesday evening.

J. W. Chadsey was chosen superintendent and Joseph G. Hastings assistant of the Congregational Sunday school for the ensuing year.

District Deputy Charles Smith and suite of Arcturus Lodge of Odd Fellows go to Palmer to-night to install the officers of the Palmer lodge.

The Misses Ramsdell and Miss Mary Hitchcock gave a New Year's tea to their lady friends at Barker Ramsdell's Monday afternoon from three to five.

J. G. Leach, who has for a number of years been connected with the Knowles pump works, has been transferred to the Blake pump works in Cambridge, and will take the same position, that of superintendent. A gathering of his shopmates was held in the town hall Saturday evening, and a presentation of a book case and office chair was made him, followed by a turkey supper served at Joyce's restaurant. Mr. Leach has always been popular at the pump works, and his departure is much regretted by his many friends. His family will remain in town for the present.

WILBRAHAM.

Dexter Phelps entertained a large party on Monday evening.

This week has been a week of prayer at the Methodist church.

The stewards of the Methodist church met last Monday evening.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society met at Mrs. W. R. Newhall's this afternoon.

A progressive whist party was given by Dexter Phelps Saturday evening. Miss Mary Merrick took the first prize for ladies, and Fred Reid of Amherst Agricultural College first for gentlemen.

Mrs. Loren Phelps, 86, one of the oldest residents of the place, died yesterday from the effects of a paralytic shock about Thanksgiving time. She leaves a husband and seven children. The funeral will be to-morrow afternoon at 1 o'clock.

A reading circle was organized at the Congregational parsonage on Monday evening with the following officers: President, Miss Mary Howard; vice president, Miss Carrie Moody; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Frank Gurney; committee on naming a course of reading, etc., Mrs. M. S. Howard, Miss Dora M. Merrick, Miss Gertrude Wetherbee.

Mr. Pease, the postmaster, is in favor of the plan for money order offices which has been placed before the Postmaster General by S. W. Hook, formerly of the Concord, N. H., postoffice, and now residing in Locks Village, Mass. Mr. Hook's plan is to let every post office not now a regular money order office be made an issuing money order office, such offices to issue money orders upon all regular money order offices, but no orders to be drawn upon them. Having no orders to pay there would be no chance of any trouble through being short of funds. All the postmasters would have to do would be to issue orders, send the money received therefor weekly to a designated depository, and forward a record to Washington. Mr. Pease also holds to the theory of making all post offices savings banks.

Wesleyan Academy.

A large party went to Nine Mile pond for skating last week.

There is some talk of procuring an organ for the Young People's Christian Association.

The first hare and hound chase of the term was held last Saturday. E. S. Davis, T. G. Robbins, H. L. Hannah and J. L. Parker were the hares, and S. P. Billings, H. H. Billings, W. Seare, C. M. Birnie, C. D. Peck, and J. H. Taylor were the hounds. The course run was about eight miles. The hares were not caught and the hounds came in 15 minutes behind them.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 4, 1893.

In no recent year have the proceedings of the Legislature upon its first day been of more importance than they have been to-day, for not only has the speakership been settled, but a decision has been reached in the matter of the United States senatorship, upon which a result is not usually known, in case of a contest, till after the second Tuesday of the session. But the course of events has been decidedly singular this year, and this essential issue has been settled in a caucus of Republican senators and representatives which lasted about two hours. The Crapo men made the best of their weakness, but it was of no use from the start for them to try to stem the tide which was running in favor of Mr. Lodge. When Senator Butler of Bristol, who was in charge of the Crapo movement, made his closing speech, it looked as if he were about to conclude with a withdrawal from the caucus, but on the other hand, after warning the members of the dire consequences to follow from pursuing the course upon which the majority was clearly bent, he made an anti-climax by saying nothing bold at all, but promising the support of the Crapo men to the result of the caucus, whatever it might be.

Other Crapo men tried to secure a stay of proceedings. Mr. Hayes of Lowell went so far as to say that if the vote upon the question of postponing action to January 12th, which was what Senator Butler moved to do, was regarded as binding to abide by all subsequent action of the caucus, he should not stay in the caucus. The presiding officer of the caucus, President Pinkerton of the Senate, replied that that was a matter for each man's conscience, whether he would be bound by the action of the caucus. Hayes started for the door and was just going out, evidently not understanding the purport of President Pinkerton's reply, when Speaker Barrett called him back, saying that the ruling had been in his favor. Others tried to get a delay of proceedings, especially Messrs. Rugg of New Bedford and Comins of Worcester, but it was of no use. It was said by Messrs. Parkman of Boston, Parkhurst of Clinton and others, that the action of the majority of the House and Senate, some 125 out of 164 signers to the call preferring January 4th rather than any other date, showed how they felt on the question of delaying action. So the upshot of it all was that the motion to postpone action to January 12th was voted down by 134 to 40 and then, by 142 to 30, they voted to proceed to ballot at once. The result was as follows:

|---|---|
| Whole number of votes | 186 |
| Necessary for a choice | 94 |
| Frederic T. Greenhalge | 2 |
| William Cogswell | 2 |
| John D. Long | 5 |
| William W. Crapo | 30 |
| Henry Cabot Lodge | 147 |

Amid applause on the part of the Lodge men the caucus adjourned. The Crapo men disclaimed any desire to get Democratic votes, and there is no doubt of the election of Mr. Lodge.

The vote of 128 for Barrett in the caucus of House Republicans upon the speakership to only 30 for Mr. Bennett of Everett was a great surprise to the Bennett men. It seems that they had good reason to expect more votes than Bennett received, for as late as Tuesday evening men were in Bennett's headquarters saying that they should vote for him who actually voted for Barrett, and one of the most prominent men on the Bennett side went over to Barrett at the last moment. It would not be strange if some of these had been for Barrett all the time and were only in the Bennett camp to find out what was going on. But it is all over now and the only result will be to give Barrett more prestige than ever and make it more difficult to rally men against him. One of the Bennett leaders, speaking of the result after all was over, said that the only thing to do was to keep up the fight. His courage is good, but popular support seems to be lacking. When the senatorship is an issue two years hence, when Mr. Hoar's term expires, then it can be seen whether Mr. Barrett will be be able to carry off the prize. It will be remembered that one of the arguments of the Bennett men was that if Barrett were elected speaker this year, it would make him all the stronger candidate for senator two years hence. As their apprehensions have not met popular response, it looks as if the people would be pleased with Lodge and Barrett as the Republican senators from Massachusetts.

Barrett said some good things in his inaugural, things which have not been said by any speaker before, nor have been noticed by Barrett himself before. He recognized the importance of the matters of legislation which are pending, and the closeness of these issues to the daily life of the people. It was an unusual vein for Barrett, but it was in a line which has been too much neglected by the presiding officers of the Senate and House in their exhortations to do the work of the session quickly and go home.

The contest over the office of sergeant-at-arms resulted in a complete fiasco of the opposition to Capt. Adams. In the caucus there was only one vote for Capt. Kimball of Enfield and one for the colored candidate, or the "Negro," to use the term which is officially indorsed by the black man in convention recently, while in the vote in the House Mr. Mahoney, the supposed leading anti-Adams candidate, had only one vote. Capt. Kimball had five and Mr. Chappelle one. Mr. Churchill of Worcester, the candidate of the Democrats, had his full party strength, 64 votes, but it did not signify anything against the united Republican side. Capt. Adams is thus sure of his place and everything about the state house may be expected to run with smoothness hereafter during the session, as far as the province of the sergeant-at-arms is concerned. The captain was particularly jovial after his reelection and will doubtless make himself as much a favorite as ever.

For the fifteenth consecutive year Rev. Daniel Waldron has been elected chaplain of the House. He is very popular and his prayers are short and pointed, simple and humble and sincere.

As Speaker Barrett said in his inaugural, this promises to be one of the most important sessions of a decade. It looks now as if the matters to be disposed of would be of larger financial importance than ever. The question of rapid transit in Boston is very urgent and presses for solution. No one who walks the streets of the city can fail to feel keenly the great need for some more expeditious way of going from point to point within a short radius. The plan is proposed to tunnel under the Common, but to the eyes of many the Common is sacred ground, and such a proposition will be opposed vigorously as will one to take off some from its sides.

There will be proposed divisions of towns; the Cape Cod ship canal and many other matters which will demand unusual business capacity in the members.

Politically, the Republicans will have everything their own way, for they have a two-thirds majority in each branch and can pass any measure over the governor's head, if it comes to an issue of party politics. It does not appear now as if such would arise, unless it is something over the Boston police commission, which is a very sore spot with the Democrats. LANDON.

CARD.—To all friends who by their words of sympathy and deeds of kindness sought to aid me in my recent affliction, and to the members of the Masonic order in particular, I wish to tender sincere and heartfelt thanks.

MRS. H. M. MAKEPEACE.

Fail to Do Their Duty.

Everybody has at times failed to do their duty towards themselves. Hundreds of lady readers suffer from sick headache, nervousness, sleeplessness and fewale troubles. Let them follow the example of Mrs. H. Herbechter, Stevens Point, Wis., who for five years suffered greatly from nervous prostration and sleeplessness, tried physicians and different medicines without success. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine caused sound sleep every night, and she is feeling like a new person. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler, Laramie City, Wyoming, who tried all other remedies, declares that after three weeks' use of the Nervine for headache, nervous prostration, etc., she was entirely relieved. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. Trial bottle free. 52-17

Fell Dead.

These words are very familiar to our readers, as not a day passes without the report of the sudden death of some prominent citizen. The explanation is "heart disease." Therefore beware if you have any of the following symptoms: Short breath, pain in side, smothering spells, swollen ankles, asthmatic breathing, weak and hungry spells, tenderness in shoulder or arm, fluttering of heart or irregular pulse. These symptoms mean heart disease. The most reliable remedy is Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which has saved thousands of lives. Book of testimonials free at LeGro & Lynde's, who also sell the New Heart Cure. 52-17

To the World's Fair Free.

To Residents of State of Massachusetts.

The BOSTON GLOBE has inaugurated another grand voting contest, whereby the most popular school teacher of either sex, the most popular postal employe of either sex, the most popular employe of either sex in any store or mercantile business, including telegraph and telephone operators; the most popular policeman in any city or town; the most popular fireman, a member of any fire department, and the most popular journeyman mechanic of any recognized trade in the State of Massachusetts can be voted for (on GLOBE coupons). The offer includes Pullman sleeper, meals en route, first-class hotels in Chicago, a ticket of admission to the fair for seven days while there. The whole trip to occupy ten days. See offer in to-day's GLOBE.

Raymond & Whitcomb's World's Fair Excursions.

Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb's schedule of excursions to the World's Columbian Exposition next summer includes no less than 116 trips from Boston, besides others from New York and Philadelphia. This is by far the largest enterprise of the kind ever undertaken. Each party will travel to and from Chicago in a special train of magnificent new Pullman vestibuled sleepers with a dining-car, and the service will amount to practically a daily train from the East. In Chicago the parties are to make their headquarters at The Raymond & Whitcomb Grand Hotel, a splendid new structure of brick, with a bathroom for every two apartments, electric light, steam heat, and every other first-class appointment. The site is on three quiet boulevards (Fifty-ninth street, and Madison and Washington avenues), within 1000 feet of the Exposition grounds. Oscar G. Barron, of the White Mountain Fabyan House, will be the manager. A book giving full details about the superior accommodations thus provided for New England visitors to the Fair will be mailed to any address by Raymond & Whitcomb, 296 Washington street, Boston.

Cure Yourself.

Don't pay large doctor's bills. The best medical book published, 100 pages, elegant colored plates, will be sent you on receipt of three 2-cent stamps to pay postage. Address A. P. Ordway & Co., Boston, Mass.

Just Married.

How loving they are; this is always a sure sign. After the first year sometimes it don't hold good. When Charles comes home to you grouty and cross, snapping and snarling, unable to relish the nice dinner you have cooked, and feels as if there was a ton of pig iron in his stomach, he is troubled with dyspepsia, and Sulphur Bitters is the only medicine that will cure him.

JANUARY, 1893.

ANNOUNCEMENT FOR THE NEW YEAR.

We claim, as heretofore, equal privileges with the letter carrier and the newsman, and indulge in a salutatory; a bit of a letter, a New Year's talk.

The wildest thought of the twentieth New Year gone would not have imagined the figures that showed the round-up of 1892. That's a satisfactory experience; but we are not satisfied.

Satisfied: then we drift. Content: then decay begins. No merchant, artist, explorer worth the name is ever satisfied with what has been. And so, while thanking the dear public that has accepted and appreciated our service, we are thinking of a fancied plus ultra which we hope this year to crystalize with a fact.

Each day, each week, each month, adds to our experience and to the betterment of the store service. 1892 saw many improvements. 1893 will likely see more.

For the rest—we pluck the wish-bone of the new year with you and go at once to business.

ANOTHER LIMITED SALE.

The interest created by our operations a year ago was quite general. This year we expect to win again on a larger, grander scale. The event has been considered for months, and preparations have been making which place us in a position to do wonders.

This is just what we propose to do. Goods by the thousands of dollars shall go from us to you without profits, equal sums that will make us losses, other equal sums that will make losses to the dealers and makers desiring to use us to reach you.

Now for a few details. The story can only be begun this week, to be continued next and after. That means that you must watch the papers. If you skip a day you may miss the very bargain you wanted most.

To Begin With—

We shall have out at 95 cents a yard cream and colored flannels beautifully embroidered, such as nobody dreams of getting for less than $1.25, $1.50 and $2 a yard.

Never anything like them at 95 cents before, so far as we know. The embroidery work is mostly done by hand with great patience and skill, and the materials are fine in proportion to the richness of the embroidery.

The sale opens this week.

India Silks—

Cheney Bros'. India figured silks—the finest in the world, to be sold at 55 cents a yard. They are the balance of the remarkable collection of extraordinary silks that we were so proud of last season.

Will you pay us a dollar a yard for new patterns of the same material when they arrive next month? Of course you will.

The sale opens this week.

Dress Goods—

The time has come to let go all fancy dress goods from the stock; but if that was all we had to say it would not be worth while to print these lines. We are talking about more than fancy dress goods. We are going to pick out all the odd and end pieces of dress fabrics in the store, plain, fancy, or of whatever sort—75-cent goods, $1 goods, $1.25 goods and $1.50 goods—and sell them all at 55 cents a yard. The sale includes—plain camel's hair plain serges

plain sebastapols plain India twills plain armures
fancy serges, silk spots bouclé plaids
knickerbocker plaids plaid gray weaves striped gray weaves
silk spot weaves

No samples will be given, for the goods are of a sort that will slip out of reach if you stop to think long.

Sale opens this week.

SALE OF MUSLIN UNDERWEAR.

Friday, January 6th, we will open the greatest special sale of muslin underwear ever made in this market. Prices will rule so low as to cause a flutter all over Western New England.

Every garment will be worth more money than anything you ever saw at the price—worth more in material, worth more in work, worth more in style.

We have arranged to distribute buyers as evenly as we can, so that all who come may find comfortable room. We know of only one way to manage a crowd; scatter the things it wants to buy.

Fourteen Pounds in Two Weeks.

Happy Experience of a Railroad Man.

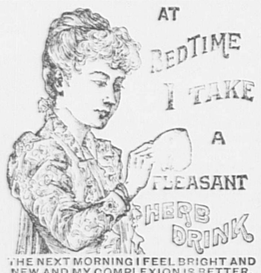
Mr. Peter Owens of Greenbush, N. Y., one of the oldest and best known engineers on the H. R. R. R., writes: "A few years ago I was taken sick. My trouble was general debility, pain in the back, blinding sick headache, and dyspepsia, caused by irregular habits of eating and the constant jar of the engine. I was losing flesh daily, and had no appetite; had consulted my physician, took his medicine, but continued to grow so much worse that I concluded my days of labor were about over. At this critical time I was advised to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I did, and from the very first bottle I began to grow better, my appetite returned, and for the first two weeks I gained over a pound a day. I most heartily recommend it to all troubled as I was, for I know it is a medicine worthy of all confidence."

Hundreds of persons of sedentary habits are troubled with constipation and kidney disease, two of the most common ailments; they ought to be attended to, for they never of themselves get better. Mr. Geo. A. Wagner, Palatine Bridge, N. Y., and one of the Wagner Drawing Room Car Co's popular conductors, found it the only cure for constipation and kidney troubles; it also cured him of an obstinate case of catarrh of the bladder. Have you symptoms of dyspepsia, painful weight in the stomach after eating, headache, constipation, pain in the back? If so, do not delay in taking Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, as it may save you from some dreadful disease that might end in death.



THE NEXT MORNING I FEEL BRIGHT AND NEW AND MY COMPLEXION IS BETTER.

My doctor says it acts gently on the stomach, liver and kidneys, and is a pleasant laxative. This drink is made from herbs, and is prepared for use as easily as tea. It is called

"One, Two, Three."

It was an old, old, old, old lady,
And a boy who was half-past three;
And the way that they played together
Was beautiful to see.

She couldn't go running and jumping,
And the boy, no more could he,
For he was a thin little fellow,
With a thin, little twisted knee.

They sat in the yellow sunlight,
Out under the maple tree;
And the game that they played I'll tell you,
Just as it was told to me.

It was hide-and-go-seek they were playing
Though you'd never have known it to be—
With an old, old, old, old lady,
And a boy with a twisted knee.

The boy would bend his face down
On his one little sound right knee,
And he'd guess where she was hiding,
In guesses One, Two, Three!"

"You are in the china closet!"
He would cry, and laugh with glee—
It wasn't the china closet;
But he still had Two and Three.

"You are up in papa's big bed room,
In the chest with the queer old key!"
And she said: "You are warm and warmer;
But you're not quite right," said she.

"It can't be the little cupboard
Where mamma's things used to be—
So it must be the clothes-press, gran'ma!"
And he found her with his Three.

Then she covered her face with her fingers,
That were wrinkled and white and wee,
And she guessed where the boy was hiding.
With a One and a Two and a Three.

And they never had stirred from their places,
Right under the maple tree—
This old, old, old, old lady,
And the boy with the lame little knee—
This dear, dear, dear old lady,
And the boy who was half-past three.

SECOND HAND.

For a week she had felt an exalted assurance that the titled foreigner would ask her to be his wife, and when she finally saw him at her feet in the attitude of supplication, she was enabled to bear herself with fortitude. She had read that the women of his country never blushed and she was averse to doing that which in his eyes would be unbecoming.

Consequently, no sanguinary tint mantled her cheeks.

"My dear Count."

She extended her slender hand assuringly toward her suitor.

"Pray rise."

He did as she bade him. Presently they might have been seen sitting together upon a lavender divan.

"My dear Count"—

He was noticably thrilled by her manner of address.

"You have been married before."

His ardent gaze fell.

"Yes," he replied, hesitatingiy.

"My dear Count"—

She smiled sweetly.

—"I am informed that your former bride brought a dowry of $100,000."

The titled foreigner murmured assent.

"My dear Count"—

Her eyes were turned to his, full of soulful earnestness.

—"I take this occasion to inform you that you need not expect more than $50,000 with me."

He started violently.

"No, sir," she declared with a suggestion of vehemence, "no more."

"But"—

"My dear Count"—

She raised her hand as if to deprecate argument.

—"The rule is, half price for econd-hands goods. That's what pa pays for pork barrels that have been used, even though they are as good as new."

After a few moments' reflection he protested that he loved her.

And so they were married.—Cincinnati Gazette.

HER SECRET.

Wonderful Complexion Which No One Could Explain.

All Women Were Envious of Her for Many Years.

Now They Know All About It and Follow Her Example.

A lady well-known in our social circles has for years been at once the envy and admiration of all the ladies hereabouts, on account of the wonderful preservation of her health and beauty, and particularly because of her clear and dazzling complexion.

She has been many times urged by her acquaintances and friends to disclose the secret of her marvellaously youthful appearance. Last evening she grew confidential to a little knot of friends, among whom the writer was present, and her secret is now a secret no longer.

"Why it is really no secret at all" she said, "A perfect complexion depends upon just two things, strong nerves and a good digestion.

"Most women are excessively nervous, weak and languid, and as a result their complexions are sallow and their faces pinched, drawn and wrinkled. Female difficulties always aggravate the trouble. Few women have perfect digestion. Now obviously, if women wish sound health and good complexions they must get their nerves strong, their digestion good and have no female weakness. Disorders of the stomach and liver, with the consequent clogging of the system, is very trying to the complexion. The best thing in the world to overcome these difficulties is Dr. Green's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for it is a wonderful strengthener of weak nerves, and gives a vigorous appetite and perfect digestion. It should be used by every woman who is at all weak or run down. Besides, it is a vegetable remedy, pure and harmless."

MRS. MARY FRANCES LYTLE.

The above is borne out by another no less popular lady, Mrs. Mary Frances Lytle, who resides at 2 Hunter Alley, Rochester, N. Y. In speaking upon the same subject she said:

"I was very pale and delicate and had no color whatever. I also had a very bad leucorrhœa all the time and suffered great pains at my periods.

"I am now all well thanks to Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. My face is plump and cheeks red, and my complexion pure.

"When I began the use of this most excellent remedy, I only weighed 81 pounds, now I weigh 115 pounds and am still gaining. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is a wonderful medicine. I have not had any trouble since I began taking it."

This great remedy is the discovery of the eminent and well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. He gives consultation to all free of charge and those who cannot visit him at his office are privileged to write him all about their cases and thus get his advice by mail free.

It is certainly advisable for all to use his remarkable remedy, which can be procured at any drug store.

LASSOING AN APACHE.

Pursuing our way steadily by night, and concealing ourselves among the mesquite trees and chaparral bushes generally found near some brackish spring or arroya, known to our guide, by day, we reached and passed unmolested to the eastern slope of the famous Apache Pass, the dread of all travelers over this route, and the scene of many cruel massacres by the crafty sayages.

Turning off among the low foot-hills of the range we halted, and disposed ourselves with more than usual caution, to pass the long and tiresome day.

Any one who has ever been in similar situations will readily understand how irksome and trying to even the strongest nerves was our position at such times. We had received information that "One Eye" and his bloodthirsty band had, but three days before, attacked a party of miners, en route to San Juan valley, and Pietro, our Mexican guide, had discovered fresh signs of Indians in the pass, although the night was so dark at the time I could scarcely see the ground beneath my horse's feet.

All day Pietro manifested an unusual restlessness, and even anxiety, and could neither sleep in his turn, nor compose himself to any sort of rest, but was continually moving about, starting, and uttering strange exclamations whenever one of the animals chanced to make a noise, which, of course, could not be wholly guarded against.

I ventured a few remarks, making light of the supposed danger, with the hope of allaying his too-evident trepidation, which I was beginning to feel, might be infectious ere long. But he declared that he had never before experienced such a feeling as fear, and that what he now felt was a strange conviction of impending danger which he could not shake off.

Thinking to change the current of his moody thoughts, I proposed that we ascend one of the small, rocky hills, in the midst of which we were encamped, and take a look about us. He readily assented, and leaving our comrade to keep camp during our absence, we cautiously made our way up the elevation.

Pietro was the first to gain the top, and I saw him instinctively bend his gaze along the route we had traveled the preceeding night, and then quickly shrink back among the shrubbery which sparsely crowned the ridge. When I reached his side, he laid a hand on my arm, and pointed impressively to the figure of a solitary Indian, who, bending low, was intently engaged in examining the road leading through the pass. It was at once evident that the savage had discovered our tracks in the road, but as we always took the precaution to muffle the hoofs of our animals some time before turning off, he was now at fault.

In silence, and with quickened heartbeats, we watched the savage traitor, as, now on one side, and now on the other, he passed and re-passed the point where we had left the road. Although the conviction had instantly forced itself upon my mind that the Indian would eventually discover our trail, and I felt that we should at once hasten our departure from the dangerous vicinity, yet there was a strange fascination in observing the sagacious movements of the alert savage that held me spellbound, as it were, to the spot, and I could feel my companion's clutch, which he had not yet withdrawn, tighten on my arm whenever the Apache seemed about to achieve success.

Very few minutes had elapsed when we saw the wily red man overstep the bounds of the road, and progress slowly yet unmistakably, upon our trail. Realizing that our time for action had come, I make a motion to decend the hill, but was instantly checked by the guide, who said, sententiously:

"Wait; look!"

Turning my eyes again upon the Indian, I saw that he was retracing his steps to the road. Pausing, he drew an arrow from his quiver, and thrusting it into the ground in a position pointing its barbed head down our trail, he eagerly resumed his quest, apparently finding it very difficult work, thanks to our precaution of the night before.

We readily comprehended the manaeuver of the Apache, and I again turned to leave the hill, when, as before, the guide stopped me, though at the same time withdrawing from all possible chance of detection by the Indian, below the crest of the height. Now that the danger seemed to me more imminent every moment, he was much the cooler of the two. I began an impatient exclamation at what I thought was an unnecessary and risky delay; but immediately became silent when the old guide, whom I had already leaaned to respect and trust, said, meaningly:

"Hush, senor! Apache have sharp ears. Wait: there may be no more than this one in the neighborhood, although he has left this sign for any of his friends who may chance to pass along. We are in no danger from this fellow at present, and 'twill be a long time before he reaches our camp, at the rate he is going now, even if we allow him to go on, which we must not do. We will not be driven from the shelter of these hills by one Apache, or a score either, unless you choose to proceed, and I"—

"But, Pietro," I remarked, interrupting the eager speech of the guide, "we are not to take any chances. You forget the general's order, and the great importance of my despatches."

"No, no, senor, I remember well" replied Pietro, "There will be no risk. I shall capture yonder mescalero before he knows it, and you can remain here and see the sport. 'Twill be more exciting than the bull and bear fight in the Plaza de Los Angeles. And not half so dangerous to you, senor," he added, with a smile that showed the gleam of white teeth below his grizzly moustache.

I was greatly surprised by the change in Pietro's manner, and gladly hailed it as an indication that the situation was less imminent, after all, than a moment before seemed probable.

The guide had, while speaking, unwound from about his waist a lasso, the finest of its kind I had ever seen; and now after the manner of his people, he embraced me, then swiftly descended the hill on the opposite side from the Indian.

Resuming my former position on the height, I watched, from my lofty covert, the movement of the Apache, who had made but little progress on the obscure trail. The Indian seemed wholly absorbed in the business before him, only now and again raising his eyes from their close inspection of the rock ground to look up at the sun, as if taking note of the passage of time, or, perchance becoming anxious for the appearance of some expected comrade.

Ten, fifteen, twenty minutes passed, until it seemed he had been gone hours, and still I saw no signs of the guide.

"Ha! there he is at last," thought I, as a dark form emerged slowly from the bushes behind the stooping Apache.

"No, it is another Indian!" I almost cried aloud, the next moment, as the dusky figure came full into view, showing it to be as devoid of civilized apparel as was that of the aborigine whom I had been watching. But in a moment more I discovered my first conjecture to be the correct one, for I saw the pliant lasso whirl through the air and descend around the unconscious Indian's neck, whom Pietro, with a quick, powerful wrench, caused to accomplish a complete somersault, the Apache coming to the ground headforemost, and remaining motionless.

What was then my surprise to see Pietro coolly proceed to loosen the lasso and bestow it in a coil around his own neck, then raise the form of the brawny savage in his arms, and disappear again in the chaperal. No sound had reached my eager ears from the scene of the singular tragedy being enacted below. The lasso in the skillful hands of the Mexican had done its work deftly and effectually, and the Indian's neck had been instantly broken.

After Pietro disappeared with his lifeless burden, my eyes, as well as my thoughts, naturally turned to the arrow, telling its silently savage tale by the wayside. I had no expectation that the feathered shaft had already accomplished its mission, but so it was. My gaze had no sooner reached the fatal spot than it fell upon a stalwart Indian, in the very act of withdrawing the weapon from the soil, which after carefully examining, he replaced, with equal care, in its former position. Then stepping from the road the new comer began, with all the sagacity and eagerness of his predecessor, to follow up our trail, reminding me (curiously enough, at such a time) forcibly of the actions of some old hound belated in the chase.

I knew not what to do in this state of affairs. I felt that our situation was becoming extremely perilous, separated as we were, and far from camp, with a band of Apache Indians in the near vicinity thirsting for our lives. I could have shot the redskin from where I stood, but the echo of a rifle among the rocky peaks might bring a horde of enemies upon us at once, and we had resolved to refrain from the use of firearms as long as possible. I had not long to remain in uncertainty in regard to my own future movements, or of that of the second trailer, now so busily engaged below, however, for in another moment Pietro reappeared upon the scene of action, in his usual costume. He pointed significantly in the direction of our camp, to which we speedily returned.

A distant whoop now echoed along the narrow canon, showing that the Indians were aroused and after us. Reaching camp, we hastily packed, and led by our skillful guide, were soon out of the hills, and, speeding, were soon out of the hills, and, speeding across the scene of action, in his usual costume. A distant whoop now echoed along the narrow canon, showing that the Indians were aroused and after us. Reaching camp, we hastily packed, and led by our skillful guide, were soon out of the hills, and, speeding, were soon out of the hills, and, speeding across the scene of the singular tragedy being enacted below. The lasso in the skillful hands of the Mexican had done its work deftly and effectually, and the Indian's neck had been instantly broken.

After Pietro disappeared with his lifeless burden, my eyes, as well as my thoughts, naturally turned to the arrow, telling its silently savage tale by the wayside. I had no expectation that the feathered shaft had already accomplished its mission, but so it was. My gaze had no sooner reached the fatal spot than it fell upon a stalwart Indian, in the very act of withdrawing the weapon from the soil, which after carefully examining, he replaced, with equal care, in its former position. Then stepping from the road the new comer began, with all the sagacity and eagerness of his predecessor, to follow up our trail, reminding me (curiously enough, at such a time) forcibly of the actions of some old hound belated in the chase.

I knew not what to do in this state of affairs. I felt that our situation was becoming extremely perilous, separated as we were, and far from camp, with a band of Apache Indians in the near vicinity thirsting for our lives. I could have shot the redskin from where I stood, but the echo of a rifle among the rocky peaks might bring a horde of enemies upon us at once, and we had resolved to refrain from the use of firearms as long as possible. I had not long to remain in uncertainty in regard to my own future movements, or of that of the second trailer, now so busily engaged below, however, for in another moment Pietro reappeared upon

Best Cure For

All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has no equal as a cough cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kan.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. Williams, Cook City, S. Dak.

PROMPT TO ACT, SURE TO CURE.

A MISTAKE!

EASY TO MAKE BUT SERIOUS IN ITS CONSEQUENCES—THRILLING DETAILS OF A REMARKABLE NARROW ESCAPE—MAY BE A SURPRISE TO SOME, BUT A WHOLESOME LESSON TO ALL.

A mistake. Did you ever think, or do you fully realize what a mistake may mean? The engineer makes a mistake in the signals, and the train freighted with its hundreds of lives is dashed to destruction. The pilot makes a mistake in his location, and the ship is wrecked upon a hidden and dangerous reef. A doctor makes a mistake in diagnosing the disease, and while treating the wrong affection allows the real disease to gain headway, and perhaps become incurable. A mistake is often fatal. A friend of the writer, a most estimable lady by the name of Miss S. H. Conrad, who lives at Holyoke, Mass., came near being the victim of a mistake of the above character. She fell very ill, and her trouble was pronounced first one disease and then another and another, she meanwhile growing constantly worse. In speaking of her affection she said: "For years I was troubled with weak nerves and a bad stomach. Some called it heart disease, others congestion of the liver, and others still, malaria, inflammation of the stomach, etc. I was confined to my bed; could keep nothing on my stomach, and ached so intensely all through the system that life was almost unendurable. While in this condition I read some of Dr. Royce's remarkable cures, which are being published in the papers, and I decided to write to him, and did so, getting a favorable reply. I at once sent for his treatment, and the result was truly marvelous. From the first dose I date my improvement. I am now in better health than for years previous. Words are inadequate to describe the gratitude I owe to Dr. Royce and his vegetable remedies, and I am satisfied that the majority of ills can be cured by vegetable medicines." Miss Conrad got well, as she says above, and as the writer well knows, by at last getting the right treatment, but how many people make a mistake in regard to their complaints, and continue to treat the wrong disease? If you have tried and failed, and find you are no better after a fair trial, you can depend upon it that you are treating the wrong disease. You cannot afford to make a mistake in regard to your health, and if you have been using medicine or medicines which have made you no better, stop them at once and do as Miss Conrad did, go to Dr. Royce and be cured. Vegetable Remedies will cure when all others fail, and Miss Conrad's statement and opinion above expressed, "that they will cure the majority of ills," is borne out by both fact and experience. They do cure; and they cure the very worst cases too, cases that have defied the skill of many eminent physicians. All ordinary affections yield like magic to their wonderful restorative effects. You will make no mistake if you consult Dr. Royce of 305½ Main street, Springfield, Mass., well known as the most successful specialist in the treatment of nervous and chronic diseases. All cases treated for $5 per month. Consultation free, in person or by letter. Office hours 9 a. m. to 6 p. m.

Ships at Sea.

I have ships that went to sea
More than fifty years ago,
None have yet come home to me,
But keep sailing to and fro.
I have seen them in my sleep,
Plunging through the shoreless deep,
With tattered sails and batter'd hulls,
While around them scream'd the gulls,
Flying low, flying low.

I have wonder'd why they stayed
From me sailing round the world,
And I've said, "I'm half afraid
That their sails will ne'er be furled."
Great the treasures that they hold,
Silks, and plumes, and bars of gold,
While the spices which they bear
Fill with fragrance all the air,
As they sail, as they sail.

Every sailor in the port
Knows that I have ships at sea,
Of the winds and waves the sport,
And the sailors pity me.
Oft they come and with me walk,
Cheering me with hopeful talk,
Till I put my fears aside,
And contented watch the tide
Rise and fall, rise and fall.

I have waited on the piers
Gazing for them down the bay,
Days and nights, for many years,
Till I turned heart-sick away,
But the pilots, when they land,
Stop and take me by the hand,
Saying, "You will live to see
Your proud vessels come from sea,
One and all, one and all."

So I never quite despair,
Nor let hope or courage fail,
And some day, when skies are fair,
Hope the bay my ships will sail.
I can buy, then, all I need,
Prints to look at, books to read,
Horses, wines and works of art,
Everything except a heart—
That is lost, that is lost.

Once, when I was pure and young,
Poorer, too, than I am now,
Ere a cloud was o'er me flung,
Or a wrinkle creased my brow,
There was one whose heart was mine,
But she's something now divine,
And though come my ships from sea,
They can bring no heart to me
Evermore, evermore.

TAKEN FOR A HORSE THIEF.

While we were in camp at Lost Canon, Colorado, we were greatly disturbed one morning by the discovery that "Rob," my brother John's favorite riding horse, was missing. My brother, I should perhaps explain, was superintendent of a railway survey party which had been in the West for several seasons. I had but recently joined the party.

The other animals of our little train were on hand, as usual, but this fine horse, which, every morning, as regularly as the sun rose, came whinnying to the camp fire for his accustomed treat of cold biscuit, which John never failed to have laid by for him, was absent.

A careful search of the ground where the horses had been grazing led to the finding of several suspicious signs. First, there was the track of a shod horse, whereas all ours were unshod; secondly, a half masticated quid of tobacco, still moist, an article which none of us used in that form, except "Old Joe," and he had not been in that part of the canon for several days; and thirdly, some shreds of woolen yarn hanging on a greasewood bush, such as might have been torn away from a saddle blanket.

We followed the trail of the shod horse for a mile or two up the mesa, in the direction of the ranches on the Mancos, but there we lost it.

Returning to the camp, John saddled one of the other horses and rode over to the Mancos to make inquiries of the ranchers there, but returned without having learned anything either of the horse or of the thief. We were all satisfied that the horse had been stolen, and all, especially John, were angry. To steal a horse in that country, where a man's comfort and often his life depends upon his being well mounted, is considered a capital crime. Had the thief fallen into our hands he would have met with but little mercy.

But the third morning after Rob's disappearance we heard his familiar whinny as he led up the band, as usual, for his morning ration. Though, as John used to say, he could do "everything but talk," we could never find out where he had been during his three days' absence, or how he had managed to get back.

About a week afterward it became necessary for John to go to Animas City to replenish our stock of food; but on the evening before he was to start, in driving up the horses, "Brimstone," a vicious bronco, aimed a kick at him, which, striking the knee, so disabled him that he could not sit in the saddle without great discomfort, and it was decided that I should make the trip in his place.

I was a stranger in that country, as I have said, but the trail was an easy one to follow, and I started early in the morning, riding "Rob" and leading one of the other horses upon which to pack back the supplies.

John had a fine new aparejo, or pack saddle, in Animas, which I was to get and use on the return journey, so I took none with me. I was to stop at Parrott City over night, ride down to Animas, make my purchases, return to Parrott, stay there the second night and then return to camp.

I reached Parrott, and as I rode down the one street of the city I noticed that I seemed to be an object of interest to every one I met—all men, for there was not a woman or child at that time in the place, except the old French landlady of the "Miner's Rest."

Every one whom I met would stop, look at me, then at the horses, and turning gaze after me as I kept on toward the hotel. They began to collect in groups, and to follow me as I rode along.

Why I should thus be the "cynosure of every eye" I could not at first imagine. I was neither so handsome nor so ugly as to attract especial attention, and surely the presence of a stranger was not so uncommon a thing in that part of the country as thus to excite a whole community.

Finally I decided that it must be the horses, for both "Rob" and "Witch" were fine animals, and I knew that every man in that section was interested in a good horse. By the time I had put up my beasts and ordered my supper there were at least a dozen men collected at the hotel, looking at and evidently talking about me.

While I was at the table I could see them peering in at the window and open door, and I began to feel somewhat annoyed by their uncivil curiosity, so different from anything I had before met with in the West.

By the time I had finished and sauntered out to the porch, the crowd had increased to the number of at least thirty, and I seemed to detect a threatening air in their muttered talk and sidelong glances at me.

As I sat down in one of the battered chairs, the crowd, as by common consent, massed together at the foot of the steps leading up to the porch, and what seemed to be a committee of investigation detached itself from the rest and came up to where I sat. The foremost, a small, quiet man, with a grizzled beard and a cool gray eye, drew near and addressed me.

"Stranger, I'd like to ask you a few questions," he said, gravely.

"All right, drive on!" I answered, curtly, for I was beginning to grow angry at what I considered the impertinent attention of which I was the object.

"What might your name be?"

"It might be Smith," I replied, derisively.

"And where might you be from?"

"China."

"Where did you get that horse you're riding?"

"Stole him, of course," sarcastically.

"Reckon you did; but you are pretty cheeky to acknowledge it. I'm the sheriff of this county, and I'll have to ask you to come with me."

"Come with you? Where? What do you mean?"

"I mean I'll have to arrest you till this matter is settled."

"Arrest me! What matter?" I gasped, thoroughly taken aback.

"Till you can prove how you came by that horse."

"What do you mean? You don't take me for a horse thief, do you?"

"That's just it, so come along!"

"Pshaw!" broke in another of the committee. "What's the use of talking? Haint he split on himself and 'knowledged that he stole the hoss?"

"But, gentlemen," I spoke up, alarmed, for matters seemed to be growing serious, "it's all a mistake. The horse is mine, or at least my brother's."

"Mebbe your brother's name is Smith, too?" queried one of the committee, grimly sarcastic.

"The way of it is just this," broke in the sheriff. "One of these horses you have here, I think, is John Percy's riding horse, and when I was over on the Mancos about a week ago he told me he'd been stolen—"

"Yes," I interrupted eagerly, "so he was, but he came home the next day."

"That's too thin!" growled one of the others, while the sheriff went on: "And I promised to keep a lookout for him. You may be his brother, as you say," he added, doubtfully, "but I've known him for ten years, and I never knew he had a brother. Besides, you and he don't favor each other very much."

That was true; two brothers were never probably more unlike in personal appearance than John and I. He was of medium height, massively built, with coal-black hair and eyes. I was tall, slender, and very decidedly blonde.

"But I tell you I am his brother!" I answered energetically.

"Haven't you got anything about you that will prove it?"

I searched my pockets thoroughly, but I could not find a scrap of anything to prove my personal identity. My note book and a few letters, addressed to myself, I had left in my other coat. The crowd, which by this time had surged up to the steps, began to growl ominously.

"The sheriff went on: "If you are John Percy's brother, what are you doing here? He told me he was camped on Lost Canon, and was going to leave for Montezuma Valley in a few days.

"So we are, and I am on my way to Animas, to get some provisions before we move.

"How are you goin' to get it over?" asked one of the crowd.

"Pack it on the other horse."

"Ye haint got no pack saddle, and even ef ye be a tender-foot, ye ought to know ye can't pack grub on a bare-back hoss."

"But John has an aparejo in Animas and I am going to get it."

"Where's the happy rayo at?"

Just then, when I needed it most, my treacherous memory played me false. For the life of me—and it began to look as if it were for my life, indeed—I could not remember the name of the man in whose care the aparejo was left. The crowd watched me with lowering looks, and the growls meanwhile were becoming more ominous than ever.

Another investigator spoke up: "Where did ye get that hoss ye'er leading?"

"She's John's, too."

"Bought her mighty lately, then. Didn't have her last summer when I saw him in Silverton."

As I did not know when John had bought the mare, I could say nothing.

"Boys," went on the other, "I'm blamed ef I don't b'lieve that's the mar' was stole from Jim Pate at Hermosa a couple of months ago."

"Didn't he say it was a bay filly, four year old, with a white star in her forrid?"

"That's so! That's the critter! He's stole 'em both! Hang him! hang the hoss-thief! Fetch a rope! Stretch his neck fer him!" were some of the cries that broke from the crowd, and a rush was made in my direction.

The sheriff had been standing quietly by while this colloquy was going forward. But now, quick as a flash, he caught me by the arm with a grip of steel, whirled me behind him, and the long barrel of his revolver was levelled in the face of the angry mob.

"None of that, boys," he said, coolly. "No hanging here, please."

"But he's a horse-thief!" yelled some in the crowd.

"Maybe he is, though I don't more than half belive it. But even if he is, I'm the sheriff of the county and its my place to see he has a fair trial. Come now, boys, I don't want any fuss, but—you—can't—have—this—man." and each word fell with a slow, ringing determination in the accent which showed the man's mettle. The crowd evidently knew that he was determined, for no one stirred, and there was a dead silence for a minute, till some one in the rear called out:

"What ye feared of?" Goin' ter let one man bluff ye? Make a rush. He won't shoot nobody."

"Ah, Bob Lowder, is that you? Spoilin' for a fight, as usual! If you want the man why don't you come and take him? Stand back, boys, and give Lowder a chance to show his 'sand.'"

The shot told; and with the proverbial fickleness of a mob, the men burst out laughing, while cries went up: "That's it!" "Give Lowder a chance!" "Pitch in, Bob!" "Ye ain't afeared o' one man!" "Oh no, Harry Lee won't shoot!"

But Lowder failed to come forward, and Lee turning to me, said, "Well, cap, I don't more than half believe you're a horse-thief, but I'll have to take care of you till we can straighten this thing out. Come, boys, go home and go to bed. I'll tend to this man."

"But," I objected, growing bolder as the danger seemed to lessen, "you have no warrant for me and you have no right to arrest me without one."

"Well, we don't go much on warrants out in this country; but if you insist on it, these boys can furnish you one in five minutes, signed by Judge Lynch."

The hint was sufficient for me, and saying, laughingly, "Thank you; I believe I will not insist on it," I followed him through the crowd of roughly dressed miners, which opened to let us pass.

As soon as we were out of the crowd and away from the hotel, he said to me, "Lucky for ye I was here to-night. Those fellows are pretty well stirred up. Ther've a good many horses been stole around here lately; and they've swore to hang the first horse-thief they catch. They're sober now; but if they get a liquor in them—and they seem to be stringing over to Lowder's saloon—they'll be trouble. By the way, I'll trouble you for your pistol."

I gave it to him, objecting at the same time and remarking that if there were to be a fight, it would be as well that both of us should be armed.

"But there ain't going to be any fight; I'm going to slip you off up the gluch, and if those fellows, when they get good and drunk, want to tackle an empty cabin, why let 'em. I have got to take you to Animas, and I'll do it, dead or alive."

I hastened to assure him that he need fear no attempt at escape on my part. We soon reached his cabin. As we entered it, he said:

"Hold on, I've got a better idee than that gulch business. I say Jim! and a boy about sixteen years old made his appearance, whom I afterwards found to be his son.

"Jim, go and saddle old Dick and ride up the Mancos trail. If anybody sees you, tell him you are going up to the sawmill to see Nellie. You go there sometimes, don't you?"

"Yes, sir," the lad answered with a blush.

"Well, when you come to the old Ute trail turn off, and it'll lead you into the Animas road, just below the ford. Hitch Dick there and slip the creek to the hotel. Tell Mam Frenchy I sent you after the two horses this man left there. Take 'em down the creek to the ford, and we'll meet you there."

Jim departed, and Lee said to me, "We'll slip out the back door and into the brush and make for the ford. Wait till I strike a light, so if anybody's watching they'll think we are here."

The lamp lighted, we stole out the back door and in a minute were safely hidden in the brush which clothed the mountain side. Striking into a trail that led along the side hill, half an hour's brisk walk brought us to the ford, upon the hither side of which we found old Dick hitched to a sapling.

After a half hour of waiting, which I improved in strengthening Lee's impression that I had told the truth, we heard a clatter of hoofs up the road. Pulling me back into the thick bushes, Lee waited till the rider or riders were within a hundred yards or so, when he gave twice a low, mournful hoot like that of a small barred owl. It was answered from the road, and we stepped out as Jim came clattering up, riding "Rob" and leading the mare, both saddled and bridled.

"They saw me," Jim gasped out, breathlessly, "just as I was getting out of the corral, and hollered to me to stop. There was Bob Lowder and big Alleck and Caleb Jones and about a dozen more. I didn't stop, and they fired at me, but they didn't hit me."

"I'll settle with Bob Lowder for that," growled Lee.

"I knew they would catch me in the brush, so I took to the road and came a-whooping," said Jim. "I reckon they've gone for their horses and will be after us pretty quick. They seemed to be just drunk enough to play the mischief. There they come now!" as the breeze bore to our ears the faint tramp of hoofs from up the road.

While Jim was talking, Lee had mounted old Dick and I had sprung to the saddle of the mare.

"What kind of a beast is she?" asked Lee, as we plunged into the ford.

"Who, the 'Witch'? Fastest horse in the country next to Rob here," said I.

"Well, old Dick can keep up with the funeral, I guess;" and we climbed the farther bank and dashed away at full speed. Having ridden about three miles, we pulled up and listened. No sound behind.

"Guess they've given it up for a bad job," said Jim; and we rode on at an easier pace. Just as we were entering Animas, I happened to remember that I had met, two or three months before in Silverton, the landlord of the Animas City hotel, and mentioning this circumstance to Lee, I suggested that before he took me to the lockup, we should ride around to the hotel and see whether he could identify me.

Lee agreed, and we were soon hammering at the hotel door, which was opened by the yawning landlord, half-dressed and with a lamp in his hand.

"Hello, sheriff? That you? What ye doing here at this time o' night?" he drawled out.

"Do you know this man, Cummings?" asked Lee.

"I—ah!—let me see," said the sleepy landlord, holding up the lamp and peering into my face, while I waited anxiously, for I feared, should the test fail, that Lee's confidence in me would be badly shaken.

"I—no—yes; it's Mr. Percy, brother of John Percy of Silverton."

"Sure of it?"

"Well, John introduced him to me as his brother, and I reckon he ought to know."

"Yes, I reckon so. Well, Mr. Percy, I'm glad it's all right, and if you are ever taken up again for horse-stealing, you can call on me."

The matter was explained to the wondering landlord, and we all went to bed. The next day, having made my purchases, Lee, Jim and I returned to Parrott City, where the sheriff's explanations set me all right. I afterwards became very well acquainted with many of my would-be lynchers, and had many a joke with them over the time when they were so earnestly bent upon hanging me as a horse-thief.—*H. P. ### JUSTICE PREVAILED.

The methods of the circumlocution office were graphically discussed by Charles Dudley Warner at a gathering of story tellers in New Yord the other night, says the Boston Herald. There was once a robber in Cairo who fell from the second story of a house he was trying to enter and broke his leg. Thereupon, he went to the cadi and complained. The man's window was badly made, and he wanted justice. The cadi said that was reasonable, and he summoned the owner of the house. The owner confessed that the house was poorly built, but claimed that the carpenter was to blame and not he.

This struck the cadi as sound logic, and he sent for the carpenter. "The charge is, alas, too true," said the carpenter, "but the masonry was at fault, and I couldn't fit a good window." So the cadi, impressed with the reasonableness of the argument, sent for the mason.

The mason pleaded guilty, but explained that a pretty girl in a blue gown had passed the building while he was at work, and that his attention had been diverted from his work. The cadi thereupon demanded that the girl be brought before him.

"It is true," she said, "that I am pretty, but it's no fault of mine. If my gown attracted the mason, the dyer should be sent for and not I." "Quite true," said the cadi, send for the dyer."

The dyer was brought to the bar, and, hoping to help his business, he pleaded guilty. That settled it. The cadi told the robber to take the guilty wretch to his house and hang him from the window sill, and the populace rejoiced that justice had been done. But pretty soon the crowd returned to the cadi's house complaining that the dyer was too long to be hanged from his window sill. "Oh, well, said the cadi, who by this time was suffering with ennui, "go find a short dyer and hang him. Justice shall prevail."

"He speaks very badly. I couldn't understand a word he uttered." "Yes. He's an utter failure."—Washington Star.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

THE WORLD.

The world is well lost when the world is wrong,
No matter how men may deride you,
For if you are patient and firm and strong
You will find in time, though the time be long,
That the world wheels round beside you.

If you dare to sail first o'er a new-thought track,
For a while it will scourge and score you;
Then, coming abreast with a skillful tack,
It will clasp your hand and slap your back,
And vow it was there before you.

Aye, many an error the old world makes
And many a sleepy blunder;
But ever and always at last it wakes
With pitiless scorn for another's mistakes,
And the fools who have followed go under.

The world means well, though it wander and stray
From the straight, short cut to duty;
So go ahead in that path, I say,
For after a while it will come your way,
Bringing its pleasures and beauty.

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

The women of India, of all women, are the most unhappy, the most unfortunate, the most miserable. So say our missionaries; so say, most emphatically our women missionaries, many of whom know what misfortune and labor mean by having labored among the most unfortunate and the most miserable in this country or in Europe, before going to India.

I have heard women missionaries addressing assemblies of women in Boston and vicinity, tell of the lives of the women of different classes, especially in Calcutta, Bombay, and other large cities of India. And so terrible is the bondage of the women of India, so hopeless their fate, so degrading their surroundings, so much more wretched their condition than anything I have ever known or even conceived of, I could not intelligently follow the descriptions nor imagine the details of the scenes portrayed. Yet, after picturing conditions of life intensely revolting and ind

PALMER NEWS.

Farmers' Institute.

The first farmers' institute of the season was held yesterday at the court room. In the morning Hon. John E. Russell of Leicester spoke for two hours on the horse, and held the attention of his audience every moment of the time. He was somewhat radical in his views perhaps in regard to some matters, but on the whole he offered many hints of much value. He seemed to think there was not much profit to the farmer in the raising of colts, for if rare qualities were discovered in a colt it was usually found out first by some one other than his first owner, so that the profit accrued to other parties. He thought that the Morgan stock produced the best horses for gentlemen's driving, and the Percheron for farm or work horses, the latter having been bred in France for nearly 600 years. He made some sensible remarks about feeding horses. They should be fed regularly three or four times a day, and not allowed to drink sooner than an hour after meals. Should not be allowed to become fat, for which reason he thought corn meal should not be given for food, unless in the shape of cob and corn ground together and that coarsely ground, but he very much preferred oats, though recommending that they be crushed. He had much to say on the methods of shoeing the horse. The ancients never shod their horses, and they ought not to be shod except in icy going, or if shod, should have only light shoes. He then spoke of the horse as the noblest animal next to man, endowed with strength, courage and endurance, as well as remarkable intelligence. The ancient Grecks were taught to believe that once on a time Neptune smote the earth with his trident, and lo, from the opening earth came the horse, fully developed to be the companion of man in the race for life, to aid him in waging war against nature and his enemies, and that when his allotted time on earth was accomplished he would be wafted across the Styx to spend an immortal existence with his master in the garden of the gods. With such a belief it is no wonder that the ancients treated the horse as one of the family. It affords a lesson for us to-day to treat our best dumb servant with kindness and consideration.

In the afternoon Dr. Holbrook, the delegate of the Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society to the State Board of Agriculture, gave an interesting account of the annual meeting of the board at Spencer last month. He was followed with extended remarks by G. W. Ely on the profits of raising horses as compared with the raising of cattle. The evidence was largely in favor of the former.

In this connection it may be said that the farmers ought to show more interest in these meetings, and it is hoped that the two meetings which are to follow in February and May will be more fully attended.

A freight train off the Boston and Albany track at Barrett's Junction Tuesday afternoon blocked the track of the New London Northern road and necessitated the sending of the wrecker from this place, the track being cleared so that the only delay was to the down freight.

At the close of the sermon at the Baptist church last Sunday morning the pastor made a brief appeal for contributions to pay off the balance of the debt, and in a few moments the necessary amount was pledged, so that the church begins the new year with a clean balance sheet.

The sleighing on Main street this week has been sufficiently good to bring out some of the fast horses for a friendly brush over the stretch from the Point of Rocks or Shearer's Corner, and some good speed has been shown. Yesterday afternoon the contest was between horses owned by Thomas Blanchard and Landlord Pierce of the Converse House, but neither horse could be said to have much of an advantage over the other.

Mrs. Willis, cook at the Nassowanno House, while riding in a sleigh on Main street Tuesday afternoon was run away with, but fortunately escaped without injury. The horse started near the head of Commercial street and ran up Thorndike, throwing Mrs. Willis out near Foster avenue, then running to Pine and making a turn into that street. The outfit belonged to Joseph Allen, the liveryman, and the sleigh was badly smashed.

A representative of the Burleigh Lithograph Company of Buffalo, N. Y., has been in town this week looking for encouragement in the matter of publishing a birds-eye view of the village. The samples shown were very good, and the job will doubtless be a creditable one if undertaken. Only the number of copies ordered are struck off, and they cost $2.50 each. Whether a view of this place will be published or not is not yet decided upon.

The weather bureau announced Monday forenoon that a cold wave might be expected, and it got here in good shape. The mercury commenced to drop about noon and kept going down. As it went down the wind came up, and continued blowing all night. Tuesday morning the mercury registered 5° below, the coldest of the winter thus far, but from the way the cold was forced into the houses by the wind it seemed as though the mercury had stopped about 20° higher than the true figures.

Rev. Mr. Blanchard of Thorndike talked to the children of the state primary school last Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Putnam of Danvers are visiting Miss Tapley. Mr. Southmade, one of the state agents, called at the school Tuesday, and Miss Hancock, another agent, spent Tuesday night at the school. Mrs. Mary Royce has returned to the school. Monday Richard Thomas of Bondsville paid $10 for an assault on John E. Mansfield. Wednesday Thomas O'Rourke of Brimfield was adjudged insane and sent to the hospital at Northampton. J. W. Weeks, Jr., for cruelty to a dog was fined $10, but appealed.

Unexpectedly to most people, and perhaps as much so to the proprietors as any one, it is announced that the stores in this village will close two evenings a week,—Tuesdays and Thursdays,—at 6.30, commencing February 1st. The movement was started by one of the proprietors, C. K. Gamwell, who found the others only too willing to fall in. Every business place but four are in the agreement,—the drug stores, which in other places it is not customary to include in such a movement,—Smith & Co., and W. A. Barnes.

The simple announcement of the coming of Richard Golden as "Old Jed Prouty" should be sufficient to fill the opera house to-morrow night, and the audience no doubt will be large, as the seats are selling well. The play is wholesome and amusing, and Jed, with his various peculiarities, once seen is never forgotten or remembered with aught but laughter. The other members of the company are all good, and everyone who attended a year ago will probably see the performance again to-morrow night. Seats are on sale at Allen's drug store.

At the annual meeting of the W. C. T. U., held in the parlors of the Congregational church Tuesday afternoon, the following officers were elected: President, Mrs. S. T. Hitchcock; recording secretary, Mrs. M. M. Watson; treasurer, Mrs. C. E. Dewey; superintendent of Sunday school work, Mrs. J. H. Kenerson; superintendent of scientific temperance instruction, Mrs. John Breckenridge; superintendent of literature, Mrs. M. A. Blanchard; flower mission, Mrs. S. R. Lawrence, Mrs. H. T. Huntington.

Sheriff Clark was in town Wednesday looking over the ground before making up his mind as to who should be the other deputy here. He interviewed the business men of this village as to their preferences and opinions in the matter, and then spent part of the afternoon in Thorndike on the same mission. What his decision will be is not yet known. J. A. Palmer and W. A. Weld are both hoping that the prize will come to them as an outcome of the contest between Messrs. Northrop and Healey, thinking that possibly Sheriff Clark may decide to drop both and appoint a third party, while M. J. Dawson still has hopes that he is not altogether out of the race.

A horse belonging to Joseph Allen, the liveryman, was killed yesterday afternoon in a peculiar manner. Dr. Moore had driven the animal to the Monson quarry to visit a patient, and on his way back the sleigh was overturned by a snowdrift. The horse ran until it reached the bridge between Monson and Palmer on Commercial street, when it slipped and fell dead. The blame is laid to the town of Monson in not keeping the road passable, and Mr. Allen will present a claim to that town. The horse was the most valuable one in his stable, he having refused an offer of $225 for it. He has had rather hard luck with his horses this winter, this being the third one to die within 30 days, besides another smashing a sleigh in a runaway.

The G. A. R. and the Woman's Relief Corps had an enjoyable time at their joint installation of officers Wednesday evening, in spite of the cold. After the installation ceremonies there was music by Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Weld, readings by Miss Marion Paine, the reading of the fourth chapter of chronicles—a history of the corps and post for the past twelve months—by Mrs. C. N. Coleman, and the serving of cake and hot coffee. Past Commander Deming, in behalf of Mrs. G. O. Henry, presented the post with a crayon portrait of Mr. Henry, a former commander of the post, and the Relief Corps presented its retiring president, Mrs. C. B. Ellis, with a finely-illustrated copy of "Ben Hur," accompanied with a beautiful basket of flowers.

The Palmer members of the Union Endowment have sold their certificates this week for $20.65, about 25 per cent of what they had paid in. The order was no doubt conducted honestly by its officers, but the rascality in the other orders created such a feeling against all organizations of the kind that the Union Endowment found there was no use trying to do business and voluntarily went out of existence. The members were informed by the receiver that a large dividend would be coming, but doubtless thought that a $20.65 certainty was better than waiting for something larger which might not come, and so accepted the offer of the representative of a syndicate which is buying up all the certificates of the order it can.

One of the features of the fair of the agricultural society next September will be the offering of special premiums by merchants and others for manufactures or productions other than those regularly competed for under the auspices of the society. Already several such contests are being planned, and there will very likely be more to follow. Merchants and others are invited to offer such premiums as they may see fit in various lines—a grocer for the best loaf of bread made from a certain brand of flour, for the biggest pumpkin raised from seed purchased at a certain place—anything which may strike the fancy of the person. Application should be made at once, to insure the announcement of the contest in the premium list, which will be published about the first of February.

What might have proved a serious accident on the New London Northern road at Amherst Tuesday was prevented by the presence of mind of a woman. A horse which a grocer had left standing in the street took it into his head to have a little fun on his own account and ran, taking to the track, up which he went, crossing several cattle-guards until he came to one which was too wide for him to jump, and stopped. A train was heard coming from the station, which was around a curve so that the horse and wagon could not be seen by the engineer until close upon it. Mrs. William E. Turner, living close to the track, took in the situation and running out waved her apron so frantically that the engineer noticed her signal and stopped, then ran slowly around the curve to where the horse was.

The attention of the overseers of the poor was called a few days ago to a family of Polanders in Three Rivers, the mother and children being in a decidedly destitute condition. The father had sold everything of value, even the stove and clothing of his wife and children, for money which was spent for liquor, and then cleared out. One of the board and an officer called on the family last Saturday, and found the mother and three children barefooted, and with very little clothing, the only garment of the oldest child, a girl about 7, being a calico dress, the material for which had been given by a neighbor. It was the intention of the officials to have the children complained of as neglected, and they were notified to appear in the district court Tuesday morning, but when the officer went for them they had departed for Connecticut, where the father has a job and can support them.

The incorporators of the Palmer Savings Bank held their annual meeting Monday afternoon, and elected the following additional incorporators: William Holbrook, W. H. Stowe, George E. Buck, C. H. Hobbs, C. E. Getchell, H. E. W. Clark, S. H. Hellyar, C. F. Grosvenor, F. A. Royce. It was voted to increase the number of trustees to seventeen, and the following officers were elected: President, James B. Shaw; vice presidents, Enos Calkins, George Moores, T. D. Potter; trustees, Enos Calkins, J. B. Shaw, George Moores, H. G. Loomis, T. D. Potter, H. P. Holden, E. G. Hastings, C. L. Gardner, R. C. Newell, F. F. Marcy, H. Waid, W. W. Leach, C. H. Hobbs, C. E. The annual meeting of the Congregational parish was held Monday evening, with H. B. Knox as moderator. It was voted to invite Rev. W. L. Anderson of Willimantic, Ct., to preach for six months, the salary being fixed at the rate of $1500 a year and the use of the parsonage. As the end of the fiscal year has been changed to the 31st of December the report of the prudential committee was for 11 months, showing the expenditures to have been $2091.97. The parish has a debt of $430. The date of the annual parish meeting remains the same as at present, the second Monday in January, but the pews will be rented the last Monday in December after this year. The following officers were elected: Clerk, O. P. Allen; parish committee, H. G. Loomis, A. L. Hills, George Hastings; collector and treasurer, G. A. Rice; auditor, L. E. Moore. The appropriations aggregate $2800. The parish committee is made the music committee, and also the committee on supply of the pulpit.

Thomas Landers has bought another building lot of Mrs. Merrick Whitney, and Thomas LaCroix has also bought one of her.

The ice men have been busy the past few days cutting and drawing ice. R. A. Bond and Alex Adams have been filling their houses.

The illustrated sermons which have been so well attended and so interesting during the past week will be continued as follows: Sunday evening, "The Tender Appeal;" Monday, "The Timid Seeker;" Tuesday, "Let Alone;" Wednesday, "How Long?" Thursday, "How Long Halt Ye?" Friday, "How Escape?" Sunday, "Give Thee Up."

Miss Savage is taking Miss Burns's place in school, and Miss Burns has taken Miss Howe's place, who has been compelled to give up school for a while on account of sickness.

Henry E. Abby of Springfield died Sunday morning of pneumonia. He was mail messenger at the Armory, and will be remembered as having lived here a good many years, working for the Murdock Brothers when they were in business here. He was a man whom every one liked. He leaves a wife and one daughter.

Auger—Warren.

One of the most delightful weddings of the season took place last week Thursday afternoon at the Brooks House parlors in Brattleboro, the contracting parties being Dr. Henry M. Auger of Bondsville, Mass., and Miss Helen M. Warren, daughter of Mrs. Jennie T. Warren, a popular teacher in the Brattleboro schools. At 2.30 the bridal party entered the spacious parlor to the strains of the wedding march from Lohengrin, beautifully rendered by Miss Julia Cressy of Brattleboro. E. H. Miller, a classmate of the bride, acted as usher. Rev. James Babbitt, pastor of the bride, performed the ceremony in a most impressive manner, assisted by Rev. H. E. Shaw, principal of Glenwood Classical Seminary, of which the bride is a graduate. Immediately following the ceremony a charming reception was held, after which the guests, nearly 100 in number, repaired to the dining-room, where a sumptuous wedding repast was enjoyed. The bride wore an elegant costume of white corded silk, with train, trimmed with point lace, and carried bride's roses. Dr. Auger is a graduate of the Buffalo Medical College, and the bride is well known as a highly accomplished musician and a successful teacher. The wedding presents were numerous and very elegant, consisting of a large amount of solid silver, rare china, and glass; a beautiful silver clock, French plate mirror, several fine pictures and books. Dr. Auger of Ware, Mr. O. Auger of Springfield and Mr. H. L. Auger of Three Rivers, brothers of the groom, were present, also Rev. Rev. Mr. Cayer or Ware, Mass., Mrs. G. W. Lyman of Palmer, Mass., and many other guests from Springfield, including Mrs. C. P. Stone and Mrs. Arthur Clary. Dr. and Mrs. Auger left on the 4.30 train for New York city, and on their return will be at home in Bondsville to their friends Wednesdays after January 23d.

THORNDIKE.

Morris Longtine has accepted a position in the office of the Thorndike Co.

Sleighing is now in order, such as it is, but with a little more snow it might be very fine.

The drum corps is hard at work, and in a short time they expect to be able to appear in public.

Much sickness is reported in the village during the past week, but nothing of a serious nature.

Several from this place went to Ware last Friday evening to attend the ball given by the Young Men's Union.

A brass band has been organized or is being organized. They have their rooms in E. G. Murdock's building.

The schools in the grammar building were closed Wednesday morning for the remainder of the week on account of the breaking of the grate in the furnace.

A few from this place were fortunate enough to secure seats for the performance of "Rip Van Winkle" by Jefferson at Springfield last Thursday evening.

Isadore Gay, for some time at work in the Company's office, will accept a position as bookkeeper in the cloth room, formerly held by Walter P. Bishop, who is to accept a position in Millbury.

Mrs. John St. Jacques died at her home on Tuesday morning after a short illness, leaving a husband and six small children, the youngest being about 7 days old while the oldest is only about 11 years. Mr. St. Jacques has the sympathy of the entire community in his deep sorrow.

The temperance club of this place does not exactly relish, so one of its members writes, the statements which have been made that there are 13 places in the village where liquor is sold illegally, and the report that ball playing is prevalent on Sundays in warm weather. The club claims that since its organization it would be hard to find a more sober or industrious class of young men anywhere, and that the ball playing on Sundays is no more in order in Thorndike than in other places of its size.

A correspondent of the JOURNAL writes: "The people of this place were more than surprised that Mr. Healey had been put down as an officer who showed any partiality to any one while discharging the duties of his office. It must be said that those in the liquor business in this place were always shaking in their boots when they heard of his being in town. It must also be said that Mr. Healey was one of the best officers the town ever had, and it is hoped Sheriff Clark will give him the reappointment which he deserves, and not be influenced by certain persons who have been prominent against him in the matter.

A Thorndike Woman Dies from a Fall in Springfield.

Mrs. Catherine Burns of this place, while in Springfield yesterday fell and it is believed received injuries which were the cause of death. The accident happened about 1.30 in the afternoon near the Massasoit House drug store, and she was at once taken into the Massasoit House and physicians summoned. It was announced that she had suffered a stroke of apoplexy, but it was the opinion of those who saw her fall that she slipped on the icy sidewalk and struck on the back of her head. The remains were brought to Thorndike on the noon train today.

THREE RIVERS.

Gilbert Forte is quite ill at his home this week.

Mrs. Gorman has returned from Saco, Me., after an absence of three weeks.

C. A. Bogue has resigned his position as agent for the New London Northern road.

Miss Hattie Kendrick of the Union office, Springfield, visited her parents here this week.

At the annual meeting of the Union church Tuesday evening last year's officers were all re-elected.

Miss Nettie Thayer, who has been visiting friends in town, has returned to her home in Thorndike.

Miss Lizzie Korff has been confined to her home by illness for a few weeks, but is now recovering.

Harold Dean, principal of the grammar school at Thorndike, visited the teachers here yesterday.

Fred White has been confined to his house by illness for a week, but is now able to attend to his duties again.

Mrs. Green, Mrs. Lavene's mother, has returned after a month's absence, and is now staying with her daughter on Maple street.

Miss Bessie Pease of Wilbraham, who has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lavene during the week, returns to her home to-morrow.

Mrs. Green and Miss Atchinson left here yesterday with the intention of spending several days in Springfield among relatives and friends.

The following members were admitted to fellowship with the Union church last Sunday: Mr. and Miss Butler, Mrs. Hutchins and Miss Rosa Blanchard. R. C. Newell extended the right hand of fellowship to Rev. G. H. Butler, who afterwards admitted the other candidates.

The young men's debating club has arranged to hold a debate two weeks from this evening, the question being: "Resolved, that the high license system is for the best interests of the town of Palmer for the coming year." F. A. Upham and Harry Newell will be among the principal disputants.

Some of the rooms in the school had to be vacated yesterday afternoon owing to the intense cold. Miss A. E. Walker and Miss Cora Clark taught in the third and fifth departments till 2.30 p. m., after which they were invited by Miss Twiss to her home, when they were joined by friends and a 4 o'clock tea served.

A. B. C. Defendorf of Lansing, N. Y., has been representing the Burleigh Lithographing establishment of Troy, N. Y., here this week. He is showing some fine birds-eye views of different places, among which is one of Three Rivers, which is accurate and creditable in every particular. Mr. Defendorf is endeavoring to secure orders enough to warrant the company in sending an agent to deliver the goods when ready. This is of local interest to all residents, especially the older ones, and the excellence of the work and the reasonable terms made ought to ensure a large sale.

If last Friday evening had been Hallowe'en one local merchant would have thought that the spooks and spectres were visiting his household. As it was he is completely nonplussed at a peculiar incident which occurred after he had reached home from his place of business. He had the money that was received in the store during the day, amounting to $250, in his pocket for safe keeping. When he arrived home and had settled his horse for the night he entered the house intending to deposit the money in a suitable place, but to his surprise could not find the pocketbook containing it in any of his pockets, and immediately instituted a general search, which continued until the small hours of Saturday morning began to wear away and despair had ended the investigation. After a sleepless night he arose to find the lost money serving as a bed for his horse. The greenbacks were uninjured, but how they got there to him still remains a mystery.

GENERAL BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, a familiar figure in the history of Massachusetts, died at Washington early Wednesday morning from heart failure, brought on by an attack of pneumonia occasioned by getting thoroughly chilled in the cold wind of the evening before. General Butler was a little past 74 years old, having been born in Deerfield, N. H., November 5th, 1818. His education was obtained in Phillips Exeter academy and at Colby University, Waterville, Me. He studied law in Lowell and was admitted to the bar in 1840. He was considered one of the smartest criminal lawyers of the time, and won many cases by his keen perception of technicalities which no one else would have thought of. He was early a member of the militia, and was brigadier general in 1861 when his troop was ordered to muster on Boston common. He was trying a case at the time, but was allowed to stop in the midst of it and start with his soldiers, the 6th regiment, which shed the first loyal blood of the rebellion at the hands of a mob in its passage through Baltimore. He served until December, 1864, when he was relieved of his command, and was mustered out of the service at the close of the war. He was elected congressman from the sixth district in 1866, and received a reelection for three successive terms, being defeated in 1874, but again elected in 1876. In 1871 he tried for the Republican nomination for governor, but was defeated by W. B. Washburn. In 1878 he was nominated by the greenback party, and also captured the Democratic nomination, but was defeated. The next year, with the same nominations he was defeated by John D. Long, but in 1882 was elected. His administration was a sensational one, especially in his investigation of the methods at the Tewksbury almshouse. He was renominated in 1883 and defeated by George D. Robinson. He was nominated by the antimonopolists and greenback labor fusion for the presidency in 1884 and received 134,000 votes. Two children survive him. The funeral will be Monday, with full military honors.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 11, 1893.

The Legislature missed a session on Monday because Speaker Barrett was not ready to give out the committees. They were announced on Tuesday and on the whole they were satisfactory. Speaker Barrett did not follow his policy of three years ago and punish the men who had opposed him, but he gave them fair places. Mr. Bennett of Everett, who was the rival candidate for speaker, was given the chairmanship of the rapid transit committee, which will have much to do with the problem of rapid communication in Boston and the suburbs, and also of the committee on public reservations. Mr. Roe of Worcester, who was Mr. Bennett's right-hand man, was given the House chairmanship of the committee on education. Messrs. Perkins of Boston and Leonard of Waltham, who were also more courageous than most of the members in risking their committee standing for the sake of getting a better speaker than they believed Barrett could be, were given respectively the House chairmanships of the committees on liquor law and woman suffrage. It has been said here that Barrett looked out particularly for the members from the seventh congressional district, with the idea that he could get their favor thus in his expected contest for the seat in Congress which will be vacated by Mr. Lodge after he is elected to the United States senatorship. I have looked over the list with this charge in mind, but there is nothing to support it. So Barrett is to be credited with at least an improvement on his previous record. Of course he looked out for his friends, but he did not put them exclusively upon the good committees as in the famous Wardwell campaign.

It has been voted by both Senate and House that at half-past two next Tuesday they will proceed to ballot for a United States senator. The nomination of Lodge by the Republican caucus last week makes it certain that each branch will elect him on the first day. Thus there will be no joint convention of the two branches, as has been the case in recent elections. At Dawes's last reelection and at Hoar's there was such a condition that there was no concurrent choice by both branches, but it is not possible to see how that can happen this year.

It has been decided that full military and civil honors shall be paid to the memory of ex-Governor Butler. He has been a "supreme executive magistrate" of the commonwealth, and hence the flag of the governor was floated at half-mast all day Wednesday. The Senate and House appointed a committee to see what action should be taken, and they decided upon an appropriation of $4000, a committee of five senators and fifteen representatives to attend the funeral, an adjournment of the Legislature over the day of the funeral, and the adoption of proper resolutions.

It seems that the first to move in the matter of official recognition was Col. Albion S. Drinkwater, who represented the dead governor's family. Col. Drinkwater will be remembered as the chairman of the Democratic State Committee in the years when Butler was elected governor and when he tried vainly for reelection. He has always been near the general since then. He called upon Gov. Russell to-day, and told him what would be the desires of the family for the participation of the state in the funeral services. Gov. Russell sent a message to the Legislature announcing Butler's death, and it was upon that message that the Legislature took official action.

Adjt. Gen. Dalton was before the committee in consultation and some very interesting points were brought out. It is the custom in such cases that the regiment nearest the home of the deceased shall be the escort. Very fittingly this regiment is the famous Sixth Massachusetts, which had the memorable fight in the streets of Baltimore April 19th, 1861, and thus opened the war of the rebellion. This regiment has companies in Boston, Stoneham, Wakefield, Lowell, Marlboro, Fitchburg and Milford. Another fact of note is that after the Legislature has asked the governor to order that there shall be a military escort suitable to the rank of the deceased, and after that order has been issued, the details are all covered by the military regulations applying to such cases. There will be one regiment of infantry, one battery of artillery and one troop of cavalry. The regiment will number a little over 800 men; the cavalry 83, and the artillery 112.

The Legislature has of necessity done but little this week, and a very small amount of business has been introduced.

Mr. Fuller of Ludlow has been given a place on the committee on labor, and Mr. Volk of Ware one on the committee on water supply. LANDON.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. King, who have been visiting at W. N. Flynt's, returned to their home in Troy, N. Y., this week.

Special confirmation services will be held at the Catholic church January 22d. Bishop Beaven will be present and assist in the ceremony.

Work has already commenced in remodeling the old Holmes estate, which was recently purchased by S. F. Cushman Jr., by Julius N. Graves.

Rehearsals are being held every week for "Uncle Tom's Cabin," which is to be given in Central Hall in February for the benefit of the M. E. church.

A. A. Gage receives good reports from his mare, "Bessie G.," which is in the care of trainer Avery of Springfield. For her age her record is a good one.

The Columbian Club has elected the following officers: President, W. G. Meacham; vice president, William Murphy; secretary, Charles Entwistle; treasurer, L. N. Howard.

George W. Burdick has harvested about 500 tons of ice this year, having filled fourteen ice houses. Over a hundred tons was put in Pendergast's house in eight hours, which was very quick work.

Senator Cushman of Monson fares well in committee appointments at the state house, being third on the committee on public charitable institutions, second on roads and bridges, and chairman of the committee on taxation.

The W. N. Flynt Granite company has purchased 80,000 feet of lumber, standing, and has engaged a steam saw to prepare it for use. This lumber will be used to construct a large modern barn at the quarry in the spring.

W. N. Flynt has bought the orchard and pastures of the Austin Fuller place on High street for about $4000, and has thus secured an entrance to his park from High street. Mr. Flynt is making almost daily additions to his museum and menagerie.

State aid has just been granted to Luther Gardner, also to Mrs. Lydia N. Alexander, of $4 per month each.

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie A. Webber had a daughter born to them January 5th. As this is their first baby it is safe to infer that they are somewhat pleased; it is also the first grandchild on both the paternal and maternal sides.

A. J. Bagley, on going into his hen house last Saturday morning, found a small owl not much larger than a robin. It had killed one of his best hens and eaten all it could hold, which was not much. It obtained an entrance through a broken pane of glass, but could not find its way out. Mr. Bagley has it now on exhibition, alive and well.

Fox hunting is getting quite popular of late in this place, there having been as many as three new hounds imported into town from as many different states this winter, besides several that were here before, and the melody of their voices may be heard night and day in some localities. Henry C. Brown seems to be the veteran fox hunter, and when the dog gets close to the game he appears as spry as a boy, and if Reynard comes within reach of his old muzzle-loader, which Mr. B. has used in this business for over 40 years, he is pretty sure to stop.

WALES.

Porter Plimpton has bought the Porter Thompson place opposite the Hegan mill.

A Disastrous Fire.

There was a serious fire in Shawville Tuesday afternoon, when the Shaw block and a large three-story wool house were burned, the loss being about $12,000. The fire caught in the upper story of the Shaw block from a chimney. This was the only real business block in the place, and was occupied by M. A. Cobbett, dry goods and groceries; Laura Belding, milliner; E. Belding, barber; C. Moore, meat market; E. Davis, notions and post office. Nearly all saved considerable of their stock, but Bert Sizer, who occupied one tenement, lost nearly all his goods. Mr. Belding also lost a quantity of household goods. There was about $10,000 insurance on the building and stock. The wool house was owned by Baker Bros., and was partially insured. A shed and engine house in the rear of the block were also burned, but were insured. The boarding house, which stood within 20 feet of the block, was saved by a stream from the pumps of the Shaw mill. The town fire apparatus was worthless. For two or three years the town has refused to appropriate money for the fire department, and little attention has been paid to the apparatus, which is a poor hand engine at best, so when wanted the machine refused to work, and the hose was so badly twisted and kinked as to be of little use.

A Nest of Thieves.

Last Sunday morning Marcus Burroughs noticed that his hen house had been robbed. Fresh blood, tracks and feathers were tracked to one of the houses at No. 4, belonging to the mill corporation. As Mr. Burroughs belongs to the thief-detecting society, officers were immediately notified and soon Sheriff Putnam and Constable Cunningham were on hand and the search of the house, occupied by Jerry Daniels and Pat Buckley, begun. In the oven of one family was found two fowls roasting, and on the stove others boiling, besides six which were all ready dressed for future use. There was also found $35 worth of cloth taken from the mill, a valise which had been stolen from a peddler a few weeks ago, and other things too numerous to mention.

An Ancient House Burned.

One of the old landmarks of the town has been removed by the burning of the house of Charles C. Cutler last Saturday morning. The structure was a large farm house, and stood about half a mile from the village. Mr. Cutler's youngest son, who was the first one down in the morning, discovered the woodwork in the back room of the unoccupied half on fire. As there was no water to work with the flames were under full headway before help arrived, though all of the household goods were saved. The origin of the fire is a mystery, as the room in which it was first discovered was used only as a storeroom. The loss is about $3000, insured for $1800. The house was solidly built of hard wood, and was a long time in burning. It was probably the oldest building in that part of the town, having been built over 100 years ago.

The continual succession of boils, pimples, and eruptions from which many suffer, indicates an impure state of the blood. The most effective remedy is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It expels the poison harmlessly through the natural channels, and leaves the skin clean and clea.

Honest.

In these days of adulteration and fraud, in all branches of business and pursuits, it is pleasing to know that there is one medicine prepared which is strictly pure. Such a medicine is Suphur Bitters in curing scrofula; you can depend on them every time. W. B. Everts, A. M., Charleston S. C.

It is Useless

for young ladies who are troubled with freckles, pimples, moth and tan and a bad skin generally to use liquid paints or dry powders, for they only make the skin look well for the time being. SPRINGFIELD, January, 1893.

SECOND WEEK OF THE LIMITED SALE.

If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well. A week ago to-day we began to offer certain things gathered from our own stocks and others that would not fail to tempt you—in most cases giving sixty cents the buying power of a dollar.

Great selling has resulted.

To continue the outflow of goods, bargains have been sought and brought, sometimes from our own stocks, sometimes from others—but brought they have been, and trade has kept its course with a rush and stocks are being cleared out thoroughly.

Muslin Underwear.

The great sale will continue this week in full force. The number and amount of sales is astonishing. The hardest thing for women to understand is how such prices are possible. There's the cost of the cloth and the cost of making, and here's the finished garment for less than the two foot up.

For example. Try home work on this gown at 69 cents. You'll wonder more than ever at the prices.

Second floor.

Brocaded Silks.

Here's a tale short and sweet. Brocaded silks ranging from $1 to $2 a yard—choice while they last 55 cents; and there is a choice, most decidedly. Those who come first get it.

This is not an offering of only a few yards. It is our entire stock with but a single exception.

Left aisle.

Dress Goods.

The gathering and opening of bargains goes vigorously forward. This week we bring to the front a catalogue of some several hundred pieces of seasonable fabrics just received.

Cotton-and-wool homespun mixture, 36 inches wide, of a quality never before under 25 cents—in this sale at 19 cents a yard, or $1.33 a dress pattern; worth $1.75. Seven mixtures.

Striped camel's-hair effects, sixteen different sorts, never before under 50 cents—in this sale at 37 1-2 cents, or $2.63 a dress pattern; worth $3.50.

Broken check suiting, all wool and good wool, in seven of the coming spring effects, worth 50 cents—in this sale at 39 cents a yard, or $2.73 a dress pattern; worth $3.50.

Fancy worsted serge, 42 inches wide, never before under 75 cents—in this sale at 55 cents a yard, or $3.30 a dress pattern; worth $4.50. Thirteen colors and black

Whipcord diagonal, 38 inches wide, never before under 75 cents—in this sale at 55 cents a yard, or $3.85 a dress pattern; worth $5.25. Five choice colors and black.

Bombay melange, 50 inches wide, never before under $1—in this sale at 55 cents a yard, or $2.75 a dress pattern; worth $5. Seven mixtures.

All-wool and silk-and-wool gray cloths in stripes, plaids and spots, reduced from $1 and $1.25 to 55 cents a yard, or $3.30 a dress pattern; worth from $6 to $7.50

Plain colors (mostly odd shades) of English serges, India twills, Sebastopols, silk-warp henriettas, etc., reduced from 75 cents, $1 and $1.25 to 55 cents a yard, or $3.30 a dress pattern; worth from $4.50 to $7.50.

Cheviot homespun, 52 inches wide, never before under $1.25—in this sale at 75 cents a yard, or $4.50 a dress pattern; worth $7.50. Ten first rate mixtures.

Left aisle.

Black Goods.

Just received wool henrietta, 46 inches wide, at 59 cents; and silk-warp henrietta, 40 inches wide, at 85 cents. The former is usually sold elsewhere at 75 cents, and the latter at $1 and $1.12½. Both are bargains that would ordinarily justify very strong language.

Received yesterday black mohair with white stripes, at 29 cents a yard. 50 cents was the price heretofore.

Left aisle.

Velvets.

The sale includes twenty-five colors or more of a first-rate 18-inch twilled velvet at $1; and a good 15-inch black velvet at 72 cents.

Left aisle.

Moquette Rugs.

A hundred of them will be let out this week at $1.12½. But what is a hundred at such a price!

Up the new stairs.

Jackets.

Lower prices are made on women's and girls' jackets to-day; and we want to say the jackets are good—too good to sell at a loss, but for the fact that we expect to gain by clearing them out more than we lose by their sale.

Fourteen Pounds in Two Weeks.

Happy Experience of a Railroad Man.

Mr. Peter Owens of Greenbush, N. Y., one of the oldest and best known engineers on the H. R. R. R., writes: "A few years ago I was taken sick. My trouble was general debility, pain in the back, blinding sick headache, and dyspepsia, caused by irregular habits of eating and the constant jar of the engine. I was losing flesh daily, and had no appetite; had consulted my physician, took his medicine, but continued to grow so much worse that I concluded my days of labor were about over. At this critical time I was advised to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I did, and from the very first bottle I began to grow better, my appetite returned, and for the first two weeks I gained over a pound a day. I most heartily recommend it to all troubled as I was, for I know it is a medicine worthy of all confidence."

Hundreds of persons of sedentary habits are troubled with constipation and kidney disease, two of the most common ailments; they ought to be attended to, for they never of themselves get better. Mr. Geo. A. Wagner, Palatine Bridge, N. Y., and one of the Wagner Drawing Room Car Co's popular conductors, found it the only cure for constipation and kidney troubles; it also cured him of an obstinate case of catarrh of the bladder. Have you symptoms of dyspepsia, painful weight in the stomach after eating, headache, constipation, pain in the back? If so, do not delay in taking Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, as it may save you from some dreadful disease that might end in death.

Janet.

Janet, fairy Janet! I love thine artless grace!
To hear thy rippling laughter, to see thy beaming face!
Thou seem'st like some rare calla, which holds its stately head
In all its queenly beauty, but I have heard it said
Thou art more like the lily beneath thy dainty feet.
Fair Lily of the Valley, the sweetest of the sweet!
I give thee bright carnations, and whisper in thine ear,
"Dear heart, I truly love thee! I love thee truly, dear!"

Janet, lovely Janet! Ah, now I see thee stand
Beneath the radiant gas-light, a rose in one wee hand;
In robes of silken lustre, and of the very hue
That Psyche wore for Cupid, true Love's own color, blue;
Around thy bosom falling, some rich lace, pure and white,
And at my step approaching, thine eyes grow strangely bright.
The wind is softly rippling thy wavy gold-brown hair,
From yonder open window, thou fairest of the fair!

Janet, dearest Janet! Through all the great world wide,
Like guardian angel hov'ring, I feel thee by my side.
Though there be miles between us, thy breath is on my cheek!
Dear Janet, hear my wooing, thou maiden fair and meek!
For now I hold thee closely and live in present bliss,
And on thy lips of ruby imprint one sacred kiss.
I pray that God's own blessing upon our mutual love
In holy benediction fall from His throne above.

A WONDERFUL TALE.

An Almost Unparalleled Case of Suffering.

Extricated From a Pit of Abject Darkness and Despair.

Emerged Again Into the Sunlight. Saved!

The best writers during all the ages have with eloquent pens depicted the awful mental suffering of hopelessness and darkest despair. Dante, De Quincy and others painted in never to be forgotten shades of sombre blackness the mind utterly devoid of hope, wretched with lost courage, despondent, disheartened.

But in real life we have never heard a more heart-felt tale of suffering, mental and physical, than that told us by a most estimable lady, Mrs. J. P. Swift, who lives at 2789 Washington St., Boston, Mass.

"Four years ago," she said, "I was in a position of complete physical and nervous prostration, had but little appetite, severe indigestion, stomach distended with gas, constipation, palpitation of the heart, sleeplessness, pain in back of the neck and base of the brain, and was so nervous and despondent that life was a burden.

"As a result of this condition, other weaknesses peculiar to my sex, fall upon me, until I was utterly wretched.

"After much medical treatment and constant failure, I was induced to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It was in a faint-hearted way and with little hope, but I soon began to sleep better, my digestion improved, the pain in the head became less severe and I gradually gained strength until I felt as if I had been extricated from a pit of abject darkness and despair and emerged into the sun-light!

"Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy saved me! Very many of my friends to whom I have recommended the remedy, can attest to similar results in their own cases.

"It is truly a wonderful medicine and might well be called 'Woman's Friend.'"

It is a fact that the sick are despairing.

How many thousands of sufferers there are who, from repeated failures to find relief, lack courage, become despondent and almost lose all hope of ever getting anything to cure them!

And yet if they will use this remarkable medicine, which is purely vegetable and harmless and can be procured at any druggist's, how soon will their gloom and despair be turned to hope and joy! Mrs. Swift has recommended it to a great many of her friends who have been cured, and it will cure you if you will use it.

It is by no means a simple patent medicine but is the marvellous discovery of a specialist eminent in the treatment of nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. The Doctor also gives to all the privilege of consulting him free of charge, and any who desire can call upon him or write him a description of the case.

THE CURFEW HEROINE.

Whether the following sketch is founded on the well-known poem, "Curfew Must Not Ring To-night," or the poem was suggested by this thrilling sketch, we do not know; but we do know that the sketch will be read with great interest.

It lacked quite half an hour of curfew toll. The old bell-ringer came from under the wattled roof of his cottage stoop and stood with uncovered head in the clear, sweet-scented air. He had grown blind and deaf in the service, but his arm was as muscular as ever, and he who listened this day marked no faltering in the heavy metallic throbs of of the cathedral bell. Old Jasper had lived through many changes. He had tolled out its notes of mourning for good Queen Bess, and, with tears scarcely dry, he had rung the glad tidings of the coronation of James. Charles I. had been crowned, reigned and expiated his weakness before all England in Jasper's time; and now, he who under his army held all the commonwealth in the hollow of his hand, ruled as more than monarch, and still the old man, with the habit of long life upon him, rang his matin and sorrow.

Jasper stood alone now, lifting his dimmed eyes up to the softly-dappled sky.

The walls of his memory seemed so written over—so crossed and recrossed by the annals of the life that had gone before that there seemed little room for anything in the present. Little recked he that Cromwell's spearsmen were camped on the moor beyond the village—that Cromwell himself rode with his guardsmen a league away; he only knew that the bell that had been rung in the tower when William the Conqueror had made curfew a law had been spared by Puritan and Roundhead, and that his arm for sixty years had never failed him at eventide.

He was moving with slow step toward the gate, when a woman came hurriedly in from the street and stood beside him; a lovely woman, but with face so blanched that it seemed carved in the whitest of marble with all its roundness and dimples. Her great, solemn eyes were raised to the aged face in pitiful appeal, and the lips were forming words that he could not understand.

"Speak up, lass; I am deaf and cannot hear your clatter."

The voice raised, and the hands clasped and unclasped, and rung themselves together, palm and palm.

"For heaven's sake, Jasper do not ring the curfew to-night!"

"What, na ring curfew! You must be daft, lassie."

"Jasper, for sweet heaven's sake, for my sake, for one night in all your long life forget to ring the bell! Fail this once, and my lover shall live, whom Cromwell says shall die at curfew toll. Do you hear? My lover, Richard Temple. See, Jasper, here is money to make your old age happy. I sold my jewels that the Lady Maud gave me, and the gold shall be yours for one curfew."

"Would ye bribe me, Lily de Vere? Ye're a changeling. Ye've na the blood of the Plantagenets in ye're veins, as ye're mother had. What, corrupt the bell-ringer under her Majesty, good Queen Bess! Not for all the gold that Lady Maud could bring me! What is your lover to me? Babes have been born and strong men have died before now at the ringing of my bell. Awa'! awa'!"

And out on the village green, with the shadows of the lindens lengthening over it, a strong man awaited the curfew to toll for his death. He stood, handsome and brave and tall—taller by an inch than the tallest pikeman who guarded him.

What had he done that he should die? Little it mattered in those days, when the sword that the great Cromwell wielded was so prone to fall, what he or others had done. He had been scribe to the late lord up at the castle, and Lady Maud, forgetting that man must woo and woman must wait, had given her heart to him without the asking, while the gentle Lily de Vere, distant kinswoman and poor companion to her, had, without seeking, found the treasures of his true love, and held them fast. Then he had joined the army and made one of the pious soldiers whose evil passions had never been stirred but by sign or symbol of popery. But a scorned woman's hatred had reached him even there. Enemies and deep plots had compassed him about and conquered him. To-night he was to die.

The beautiful world lay as a vivid picture before him. The dark greenwood above the rocky hill where Robin Hood and his merry men had dwelt; the frowning castle with its drawbridge and square towers; the long stretch of moor with the purple shadows upon it; the green straight walks of the village; the birds overhead; even the daisies at his feet, he saw. But, ah! more vividly than all, he saw the great red sun with its hazy veil lingering above the trees, as though it pitied him with more than a human pity.

He was a God-fearing and God-serving man. He had long made his peace with Heaven. Nothing stood between him and death—nothing rose pleading between him and those who were to destroy him but the sweet face of Lily De Vere, whom he loved. She had knelt at Cromwell's feet and pleaded for his life. She had wearied heaven with her prayers, but all without avail.

Slowly now the great sun went down. Slowly the last red rim was hid behind the greenwood. Thirty seconds more and his soul would be with his God. The color did not forsake his cheeks. The dark rings of hair lay upon a warm brow. It was his purpose to die as martyrs and brave men die. What was life that he should cling to it? He already felt the air pulsate with the first heavy roll of the death-knell. But no sound came. Still facing the soldiers with his clear gray eyes upon them, he waited. The crimson banners in the west were paling to pink. The kine had ceased their lowing, and had been gathered to the barn-yards.

All nature had sounded her curfew; but old Jasper was silent.

The bell-ringer, with his gray beard yet bared, had traversed half the distance that lay between his cottage and the ivory-covered tower, when a form went flitting past him with pale, shadowy robes floating around it, and hair that the low western lights touched and tinted as with a halo.

"Ah, Huldah, Huldah?" the old man muttered; "how swift she flies! I will come soon, dear. My work is almost done." Huldah was the good wife, who had gone from him in her womanhood, and for whom he had mourned all his long life. But the fleeting form was not Huldah's; it was Lily De Vere, hurried by a sudden and desperate purpose toward the cathedral.

"So help me God, curfew shall not ring to-night! Cromwell and his dragoons come this way. Once more I will kneel at his feet and plead."

She entered the ruined arch. She wrenched from its fastenings the carved and worm-eaten door that barred the way to the tower. She ascended with flying and frenzied feet the steps; her heart lifted up to God for Richard's deliverance from peril. The bats flew out and shook the dust of centuries from the black carvings. As she went up she caught glimpses of the interior of the great building, with its groined roof, its chevrons and clustered columns; its pictured saint and carved image of the Virgin, which the pillagers of ages had spared to be dealt with by time, the most relentless vandal of all.

Up—still up—beyond the rainbow tints thrown by the stained glass across her death-white brow; up—still up—past open arcade and arch, with griffin and gargoyles staring at her from under bracket and cornice, with all the hideousness and medieval carving; the stair, flight by flight, growing frailer beneath her young feet; now but a slender network between her and the outer world; but still up.

Her breath was coming short and gasping. She saw through the open space old Jasper cross the road at the foot of the tower. Oh, how far! The seconds were treasures, which Cromwell, could not purchase from her. Up—ah—there, just above her, with its great brazen mouth and wicked tongue, the bell hung.

A worm-eaten block for a step, and one small, white hand had clasped itself above the clapper—the other prepared, at the tremble, to rise and clasp its mate, and the feet to swing off—and thus she waited. Jasper was old and slow, but he was sure, and it came at last. A faint quiver, and the young feet swung from their rest, and the tender hands clasped for more than their precious life the writhing thing. There was a groaning and creaking of the rude pulleys above, and then the strokes came heavy and strong. Jasper's hand had not forgot its cunning, nor his arm its strength. The tender, soft form was swung and dashed to and fro. But she clung to and caressed the cold, cruel thing. Let one stroke come and a thousand might follow—for its fatal work would be done. She wreathed her white arms about it, so that at every pull of the great ropes it crushed into the flesh. It tore her, and wounded and bruised; but there in the solemn twilight the brave woman swung, and fought with the curfew; and God gave her victory.

The old bell-ringer said to himself: "Aye, Huldah, my work is done. The pulleys are getting too heavy for my old arms. My ears, too, have failed me. I dinna hear one stroke of the curfew. Dear old bell, it is my ears that have gone false, and not thou. Farewell, old friend."

And just beyond the worn pavement a shadowy form again went flitting past him. There were drops of blood upon the white garments, and the face was like the face of one who walked in her sleep, and the hands hung wounded and powerless at her side.

Cromwell paused with his horsemen under the dismantled May-pole before the village green. He saw a man who was to die at sunset standing up in the dusky air, tall as a king and beautiful as Absalom. He gazed with knitted brow and angry eye, but his lips did not give utterance to the quick command that trembled on them, for a girl came flying toward him. Pikeman and archer stepped aside to let her pass. She threw herself upon the turf at his horse's feet; she lifted her bleeding and tortured hands to his gaze, and once more poured out her prayer for the life of her lover; with trembling lips she told him why Richard still lived—why the curfew had not sounded.

Lady Maud, looking out of her latticed window at the castle, saw the great Protector dismount, lift the fainting form in his arms, and bear her to her lover. She saw the guards release the prisoner, and she heard the shouts of joy at his deliverance; then she welcomed the night that shut the scene out from her envious eye and sepulchered her in its gloom.

At the next matin bell old Jasper died, and at curfew toll he was laid beside the wife who had died in his youth, but the memory of whom had been with him always.

We should be able to sympathize with CARDINAL WOLSEY more fully than we do, if instead of advising Cromwell to "Serve the King," he had said "Serve a 'FERRIS' DELICIOUS HAM, at once, hot or cold."

"DANA'S CURED ME."

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.,

GENTLEMEN:—I wish to tell you of the wonderful cure DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has done for me.

For two years I suffered agony with my back and side, also my stomach, caused by the effects of La Grippe. My stomach would retain no food until I could lie down for the terrible pain in my back and sides—was confined in bed 6 weeks. My friends despaired of my recovery. One of your papers containing testimonials of the wonderful cures came to my hands. I resolved to try DANA'S. From the first I began to improve. Have taken two bottles and am well, and in five weeks I gained 13 lbs. Pain every minute a few months ago—now perfectly well. Thank the Lord! I know

Sarsaparilla

Is superior to all other preparations claiming to be blood purifiers. First of all, because the principal ingredient used in it is the extract of genuine HONDURAS sarsaparilla root, the variety richest in medicinal properties. Also, because the yellow dock, being raised expressly for the Company, is always fresh and of the very best kind. With equal discrimination and care each of the other ingredients are selected and compounded. It is

THE Superior Medicine

Because it is always the same in appearance, flavor, and effect, and, being highly concentrated, only small doses are needed. It is, therefore, the most economical blood purifier in existence. It makes food nourishing, work pleasant, sleep refreshing, and life enjoyable. It searches out all impurities in the system and expels them harmlessly by the natural channels. AYER'S Sarsaparilla gives elasticity to the step, and imparts to the aged and infirm renewed health, strength and vitality.

The Old Meeting-House.

In our forefathers' sober times,
When folks were solemn as their rhymes,
An architect of local fame,
With some sound Puritanic name,
Upon the sunny village square
Upreared the cherished House of Prayer.

Albeit 'tis said he had a heart,
He was not versed in Gothic art;
From steeple down to echoing aisle
He sought severity in style,
And deemed the use of glass a sin,
That would not let the sunlight in.

A modest vane upon the spire
Flashed, summer long, a golden fire;
The vine about the porch took on
The autumn's crimson benison;
And purity as fine as snow
The walls were ever white to show.

Still stands the House of Prayer; no whit
Has time's on-speeding altered it,
Save that we note, as in the sage,
A dignity that comes with age,
And find a grace around it cast
That speaks the presence of the past.

Those entering its homely door
A something feel unfelt before—
A sweet serenity that stills
The striving of our restless wills,
And bids us greet in glad accord
The Presence Chamber of the Lord.

AMPLE REPARATION.

"Abner Wilcox, what have you done with my husband?"

The voice was stern and menacing. She stood in the center of the small, plain, carefully kept room. A shapely forefinger was shaken at the drooping figure that stood, hat in hand, in the doorway. A shaded lamp was on the small table at the side of the room; a few framed photographs and prints on the walls; a carpet with red figures on the floor; a shining cooking stove at the chimney; above it the small mantel-shelf with a few ornaments. He saw it all, and yet it was as if he saw nothing. His face was turned to the floor. Signs of uncontrollable emotion were on him, and his frame shook and his hands trembled in the agony of his soul.

He saw the picture before him, and yet his mind was full of another picture that seemed as if it would possess him for evermore. He saw a small fishing schooner beating in for Pollock Rip, on the Massachusetts shore. The night was dark and squally. The tide was sweeping out to sea, and until it should turn, the progress was slow. The skipper was at the wheel. The small standing stay-sail had been taken in, and the husband of the woman, James Hallett, had gone aloft in the dark to furl it. The skipper threw the schooner in stays while he was coming down the forerigging. Just as he reached the rail, "Draw away!" came from aft, and then a rush of the great jib as it flew to leeward on the traveler. The block of the sheet struck him fairly, and hurled him into the gloom overboard. Then Abner Wilcox knew that when he had let go the tail of the sheet he had made this woman a widow.

Movable articles were thrown overboard; boats were in the water almost instantly, three or four of them, the handy dories of the fishing service, and search was made everywhere, but in vain; James Hallett was gone. When the boats returned from their fruitless search, Abner Wilcox was found insensible on the deck. He came out of his swoon only to rave of what he had done, and to rehearse the scene in his delirium. The skipper ran for Boston, and the delirious man was sent to the hospital, and rough but feeling hearts broke the sad news to the bereaved wife. Abner Wilcox and James Hallett had been boys together on the sandy shores of Cape Cod. They swam, fished, boated, dug for clams, and followed all the occupations peculiar to their class and surroundings, and both fell in love with the same girl. Abner was a silent, reserved, rather awkward young man. He loved Mary Crowell with all his heart; yet before he could muster courage to tell his love, James, bright, gay, and light-hearted, had sought and won the prize. She knew how it was with him. She had seen his shy, ardent looks, the faint flush that had tinged his cheeks in her presence, his awkward embarassment when she spoke to him, and her woman's soul delighted to torment him, and she did so.

When James Hallett married Mary Crowell, Wilcox had a terrible despairing time with his own soul. Out from the sandy beach, alone in a terrible storm, he fought and conquered, and a new nature came upon him, and a man was born again. He loved Mary Hallett still, but with a purified love that was devotion. Her two little girls he idolized. He was their abject slave. He wrought and toiled for them, saved and kept for them, and he loved them well. Now what had he done? His hand had, although unwittingly, bereaved these whom he loved so well, robbed them of husband and father, made their house desolate indeed unto them. After a wasting illness he regained his senses and some strength. He would gladly have died, but his life was not his own. It must be devoted to those whom he had so injured, and in his heart of hearts he so devoted it.

When sufficiently recovered he went to the sandy cape again. He could not muster courage to approach the house until after night fell, and so it came to pass that he stood in the door at eventide, and looked for a moment upon the young widow. And she—in the violence of her pain and bereavement, her passion broke forth in uncontrollablefury.

"You enemy, you murderer, you false friend, how dare you come into my presence! Did you think that after you had killed my husband I might smile on you? Do you suppose, Abner Wilcox, that I will ever believe that you did not let that jib-sheet fly on purpose? Did you think that I might ever love you? You were never fit to clean the shoes of the man you killed that night, you false wretch!"

This was more than he had anticipated. He writhed and trembled under the fierce invective. He shuddered, and felt as if his heart would break; but the very fire of the vindictive passion of the young woman, as well as the utter injustice of the attack, calmed him somewhat, and he answered at last: "Mary, God knows my heart, and it is very sore, but your husband or any one dear to you would never knowingly receive harm from me. Your husband's death was an utter accident, although it came from me."

"Abner Wilcox," she continued, "if an angel from heaven came to tell me that you were innocent, I would not believe him. You stand in that door, wretch that you are, where my husband ought to be. Living or dead, I will never forgive you for the wrong you have done me." She paused a moment, almost breathless with her wrath. Then, with imperious passion, she continued: "Go down into the bottom of the sea, where my darling is lying, and bring him back to me again alive and well, then I will forgive you, and not before."

Holding his hand before his face, as if to ward off a threatened blow, Abner Wilcox turned away, softly closed the door, and went out into the gloom of the night and came back no more. And Mary Hallett, her fury spent, sank sobbing on her knees before her chair, and prayed God to pardon her for her burst of impious wrath.

The sloop of war Pilgrim had sailed from Boston for South America, and was running out the South channel with a brisk northwest wind and a smooth sea. It was the morning watch. The lookouts had been called in, the running lights extinguished, a man sent to the mast-head, and Lieutenant Parker, the officer of the deck, brisk, alert, and commanding, was issuing his orders, trimming sail, and preparing to give the ship her morning bath and toilet. Suddenly from the masthead came the hail:—

"On deck there!"

"What is it?" from the officer.

"Something in the water off the starboard bow, sir."

"Can you make it out?"

"Not yet, sir."

"Quartermaster, aloft with the glass."

And soon the petty officer was on the forevard, gazing intently into the sea with his binocular. "Man on a ladder, sir," hailed the quartermaster.

"Watch, shorten sail," shouted the officer. "Life-boat's crew away. Orderly, call the captain. Royal clewlines—flying jib down haul—lively, my lads!—in light sails—clew garnets and buntlines—up courses—lee afterbraces—brace up aft—head yards square—fly the jib-sheets—down helm;" and the Pilgrim lay to with her head yards aback, and the boat was soon in the water pulling for a white object on the lee bow. Returning quickly, a man was passed up the side and down to the sick bay, where the surgeon was ready for him. Apparently dead, yet all means of resuscitation were applied, and at last faint signs of life showed, yet when fully restored, his mind seemed wandering, and Dr. Turner was puzzled for the time; but waited for more developments. Under opiates the patient slept.

The Pilgrim filled away on her course, and under all sail made a straight wake for the northeast trades. The able physician could not make out the case of his patient. A severe bruise was on the side of his head and face, but there seemed a mental aberration and an inability to answer questions intelligently. When asked his name he answered, "Mary Crowell." Asked how he came in the water, he replied, "Staysail." To the question where he lived he said, "Tack ship." His bodily strength returned somewhat, but his mind was weak and wavering, and his memory too dim to be of any use.

In due time the Pilgrim arrived at Rio Janeiro. The unknown waif picked up at sea was turned over to the care of the American consul, and by him placed in the hospital. He was quiet and harmless, gave very little trouble, but his reason seemed lost. The charming climate and surroundings had a good effect upon the bodily health of the young man. From the windows of the hospital he could see the magnificent harbor, and the ships lying at anchor there. These seemed to interest him, but he always appeared to be searching for something among them he could not find. A tawny silk beard grew upon his face, his form filled out, and but for the vacant expression in his eyes, he was all that manly beauty and symmetry of form could express. One day a beautiful little schooner came in from sea. Her snowy sails would have revealed her nationality at once, even if the starry flag had not flown from her peak. She seemed to interest the hapless patient greatly. When just in front of the hospital she gracefully tacked, and at the proper moment he shouted, "Draw away," and as the jib swung across the deck he was greatly excited, and seemed to be struggling with some memory, but could not concentrate his mind upon it. He watched the little vessel until she anchored, and would look at her for hours while she remained in the harbor, but at last she went away, and he saw her no more.

Abner Wilcox grew pale and thin. He visited a grave lawyer in the city, and told him his sad story. He made his will, leaving his little belongings to Mary and the children, and then he went to sea with a great sadness in his heart and a desire for death and rest. The bark Pursuit, outward bound for San Francisco, was struck by a pampero off the Rio de la Plata, and dismasted. When the gale abated, jurymasts were rigged, and the captain was able to get his ship into Rio Janeiro for repairs. One of the crew had been severely injured in the disaster, and was sent to the hospital upon the arrival of the ship. On the succeeding Sunday Abner Wilcox, seaman on this vessel, asked permission to visit his shipmate at the hospital, and receiving it, went on shore. He wandered about the beautiful city, visited the objects of interest, and viewing the splendid scenery of the vicinity, and when the visiting hour arrived, presented himself at the entrance, and was admitted.

The injured shipmate was rapidly improving under the skillful care of the surgeon in charge, and Abner contributed to his comfort as he could, and was about to leave the place, when turning he encountered a face and form that would never be effaced from his memory. Pressing his hands to his heart, struggling for breath, he murmured, "James Hallett," and fell fainting on the floor. When he recovered kind people were about him and were ministering to him. He was bewildered for a moment, but standing near was a form that brought back recollection, and he covered his face with his hands, and thankful tears came to his eyes, and grateful prayers came to his heart. James Hallett's face wore a troubled and perplexed look. His hand was pressed to his head. He watched Abner closely, and refused to leave the room. The latter slowly arose and approached him.

"James," said he, "don't you know me?"

Still the strange look of perplexity was in the troubled eyes.

The surgeon then gave Abner a short history of this case that had perplexed them so much, and with a look of intense pity in his eyes, Abner Wilcox vowed in his heart that his should be the task to restore his old friend to life and light and love again. He told the surgeon the strange story, and that intelligent officer saw at once the best hope for the afflicted and bewildered man.

"James Hallett," said Abner, slowly and distinctly, "I am your old friend, Abner Wilcox. Don't you remember me?"

The vacant eyes brightened a little, but the look of trouble remained.

"James," continued his friend, "have you forgotten Mary and the children, and the little home in Wellfleet? Have you no recollection of the schooner Watchless, in which we were fishing together? Do you not remember one dark night we were beating up for Pollock Rip, and you went aloft to furl the stay-sail and as you were coming down we tacked ship, and—"

Here the drooping head was raised, the vacant eyes flashed fire, and James shouted: "Hold on that jib-sheet, Abner, my foot is caught," and throwing up his arms, and shrinking as though fearful of a blow, he fell heavily on the floor.

They raised him, applied restoratives, and shortly after he slowly opened his eyes. All stood back but Abner Wilcox.

"Hello, Abner," said he, raising himself on his elbow, "have I been asleep long? Is it my watch? Why, how is this? What place is this? How did I get here? Where is the schooner and the skipper?"

"Gently, Jimmy," said his friend, "we will talk it all over some other time. You have been sick for a while."

"Nonsense, boy!" said James. "I am all right. Why, I feel splendid. I will get up and look around a little, and you shall tell me all about it."

And then the whole story was told James.

"And the wife and the children?"

They were well, but mourning him as dead, and no way of getting the news to them.

His impatience knew no bounds. He must fly to them at once—at once.

Christmas Eve had come—the time when all Christians are glad at heart. When the cattle kneel in their stall and worship the star of Bethlehem—the radiant emblem of hope to a dying race. The land was aglow with the charm of the season. Happy parents and happier children rejoiced and were exceedingly glad for a regenerated race and a loving ransom freely paid. A light twinkled in a little cottage on Cape Cod. A sad-eyed widow held her children to her heart and wept, as she told them of the father that was no more, and then more calmly of the glorious hope that the season gave of a blessed meeting with him beyond the stars.

Toward the feeble light two men hastened. One pressed impatiently on in advance of the other, who toiled along with quick, gasping breath, and his hand pressed to his heart. A look of pain was on his face, but he made no sign, and hurried on in the footsteps of him who had gone before. It was a glorious night. No cloud obscured the brilliancy of the northern constellations. A light fall of snow had covered the earth out of sight and added a luminous glow to the scene.

"James," said the rearmost man, "do not linger for me. Press on, to give them the glad surprise that your coming will be. I have no place there. I will come in later."

"Nonsense, Abner," said James; "the truest and most faithful friend I ever had shall share my joy this night. Come with me."

"I will follow, James; you go on at once?"

"Mamma," said little Minnie, "is God glad to-night that people are so happy?"

"My child, we must be certain that He is, and also that He grieves with those who are sorrowful."

"Will my dear papa know in heaven that we miss him to-night, mamma?"

"We must believe so, my darling."

"Yes," said a strong voice from the door, "but you will mourn no more, my darlings, for the dead is alive again, and I am here."

To picture the scene that followed, with its precious emotions, is not for my pen. It was a Christmas Eve full of sacred joy and perfect love.

After a time James said: "Why, where is Abner?"

A cloud came over the brow of the happy wife, and she asked: "Why, my dear husband, what do we want of him? We are happy enough without strangers to-night."

"Mary, you do not know," said he. "You would never have had me back, if it were not for him. I must seek for him."

They had not far to look; for having finished the task that had been marked out for him by the bereaved wife—having found the one who was lost and restored him to the arms of those who loved him best—he was lying peacefully on the snow, with a smile on his worn face, for Abner Wilcox, seaman, fisherman, and gentleman, was dead. —Harper's Weekly.

CRUEL DISAPPOINTMENT.

A newspaper man, crossing City Hall Park about 3 a. m. in a chill October morning, was arrested by sobs coming from a bundle of rags curled upon one of the benches. The gentlemen who usually occupy these reserved seats had all sought the warmth of the police stations, and wondering what kind of tramp it was that had been hardy enough to remain, the reporter inspected the sobber, whom he found to be a small boy.

"What are you crying for, sonny?" was asked, but only sobs came for answer.

"What's the matter, my lad?"

"Nothin'," he blurted out.

"Street boys don't cry for nothing," said the reporter, who knew the breed well. "Has some one been thumping you?"

"Well, I guess not," said the little man indignantly, sitting up and drying his eyes, at the bare suggestion.

"Come, now, I'll believe that was it if you don't tell me the truth. What's the trouble?"

"De hardest kind o' luck," answered the urchin. "I'd been pitchin' pennies and lost almost all my pile to begin with; so I couldn't pay for a lodgin' and have anythin' left over to buy a stock of papers in de mornin'. I walked about till I got tired and den I sat down here and fell asleep. I was mighty hungry, I tell you, and began to dream of grub.

"I dreamed that I was a lookin' in at the window of a coffee and cake saloon, watchin' the big cook in a white coat and cap brownin' sinkers on his little iron platform with de gas underneath, and a fryin' his wheats; when a fine-lookin' gentleman comes up behind me an' says, 'Come right in with me, sonny, an' we'll have a square meal.' I went in with him like a shot, you bet, and the waiter set down a big juicy beefsteak all covered with onions between us.

"'I didn't order beefsteak," shouts my friend, kinder mad like. 'I want better stuff 'n dat. I've been winnin' to-day,' and he pulls out a big wad o' bilis and shakes 'em in de waiter's face.

"'Beg pardon,' says de waiter when he sees the roll, 'Perhaps de boy will take de steak and onions, then?'

"'The boy ken have it if he wants ter,' says me friend, 'but I was goin' to order roast duck stuffed with mushrooms for two. Which would you rather have, sonny?' says he.

"Well, I'd tasted steak once before, but roast duck I never tasted, so I said I'd take duck, too, and de waiter carried de steak off. He was a long time bringin' that duck—a mighty long time—and before he got back I woke up," and the newsboy's sobs broke out afresh.

"Well, what is there to cry about?' asks the reporter.

"'If I hadn't been so hanged perticaler I coulda eaten dat steak and onions before I woke up, couldn't I?" retorted the lad angrily; "and now I'll never get a chance at another," and he wept again.

The touching disappointment seemed so odd to the reporter that he straightway provided the dreamer with the price of a small steak and walked away ruminating. When he related the story to a friend, who has a vast experience of dead beats, he was surprised to hear that the dream story was not a new one, but even the expert had never heard of it being used as a money-drawing scheme before.—New York Tribune.

A STRANGE RELIGIOUS PENANCE.—While I was in San Salvador I saw a strange sight in the street one feast day. A man was undergoing penance by crawling from one church to the other. Both churches were in the same street, and the distance between them was about half a mile.

The man had on a white suit of underclothing and a white cap was drawn down over his face. He crawled—not on his hands and knees—no, those who imposed the penance knew a trick worth two of that—he crawled on his elbows and knees, and in the middle of the street over the irregularly laid jagged stones.

One or two women stayed with the man and spread pieces of cloth to soften somewhat the hardness of the road. What was his sin I did not learn.—Overland Monthly.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

PRUDENCE SPINNING.

Prudence, sitting by the fire,
Lift your head a little higher—
How the firelight ripples in
And out the dimple of your chin—
How your sidewise-tilted head
Snares the flickering gleams of red;
Snares them in a golden net
Than your distaff deecier yet!
O my Prudence, turn—but no—
Shall a century backward flow?
Prudence—ah, awelladay!
You're a hundred years away.

He who looks upon you hears
Through a hundred bygone years
Whirr of wheel and foot's light tap
On the treadle, and the snap
Of the rose-red hickory logs,
Sputtering, sinking on the dogs;
And your breath he almost feels
In a gentle sigh that steals
From your lips, while hand in hand
Weave a dream and spin a thread—
Prudence—who'd believe it, pray?
You're a hundred years away.

* * * * * *

Silent was the studio,
Duller grew the hickory's glow,
And the skylight, cold and faint,
Seemed to frown—"'Tis late to paint!"
Prudence drooped a weary head,
Hearing not the painter's tread,
As he crossed the room and bent
Just where blush and firelight blent.
O, my Prudence, model fair!
Where's your prim provincial air?
Prudence—ah, awelladay!
How a century slips away!

RESCUE WORK IN WESTERN INDIA.

Miss Helen Richardson is a remarkable woman. In appearance she is rather below medium size; she has dark hair and eyes, a broad, high forehead, white teeth and a pleasant mouth. She is probably somewhat over thirty years old. When I saw her she was dressed simply in black, and wore a broad white linen collar and deep cuffs. She is the daughter of an English clergyman and was educated to be what the English mean when they say "A lady—a gentlewoman." Even in her girlhood she was interested in doing what she could to help the unfortunate, and, rather against the wishes of her friends, —"lead of God,"—in early womanhood she devoted herself as a nurse in a London hospital for the poor. There she became interested in and engaged in "rescue work," as it is called, "of fallen women." She has an income sufficiently large to support herself and to permit her to help others, and she has thus given herself and her all to her work.

What Miss Richardson says is interesting and thrilling, and the simplicity of her manner and the power of her individuality make her spoken words much more impressive than anything from her pen; yet the quotations below, from a little pamphlet she circulates, give a better idea of the noble work she is doing and the beautiful spirit in which she doing it, than any abstract of her talks:

Rescue Work in Western India.—Objects of the Work. 1. To seek out and reclaim our sisters, of any race or creed, who have lost their virtue—(a) By giving them shelter and support in our Homes; (b) By endeavoring to lead them to the Saviour; (c) By finding respectable openings for them on leaving the Home.

2. To afford help and protection for those in danger from the evil devices of corrupt persons."

"Proposed Industrial Home for Women, Poona.—Several spasmodic efforts have been made in Bombay City for the reclamation of our fallen sisters. As early as 1855 a little Refuge was opened, but after a time was given up; another one was started with the same result in 1865. In both cases those interested in the rescue work engaged the services of a matron; but the difficulties they had to contend with led to the closing of the home. In January, 1877, Mrs. Raitt, an officer's widow, gave herself to the work, and took a house which she named the 'Home of Hope,' for the admission of European and Eurasian women. The object, as then published, was to give to those who 'desired to leave a life of sin and shame, true sympathy and encouragement to lead a life of virtue and uprightness.' For nine years she carried on the home, and had the joy of seeing it used of God to the reformation and salvation of many who there sought a shelter; but being compelled to relinquish the work, her sister, Mrs. Gladwin, undertook the charge of the institution in 1866.

"Mr. Gladwin, a Methodist missionary, in the course of his investigations in the Society Purity cause, was appalled at the depth of degradation to which womanhood had sunk in the case of numbers living in some quarters of the town. So strongly did he feel the urgent need of some definite effort being made to raise them from their awful condition of moral corruption, that he wrote to a lady in England, appealing for women who would come to the rescue. That letter, (written as I afterwards learnt) on his knees, after a season of fasting and agonizing prayer, proved to be God's call to me, and I went out in the autumn of the same year. Very soon after my joining Mr. and Mrs. Gladwin it was mutually considered advisable for me to start a separate and independent institution, for the reception of maternity cases, and of those requiring special medical treatment, and it was opened in January, 1877, and called the 'Reformatory Hospital.' I did not know at the time whether in the providence of God it was destined to be for Europeans and Eurasians only, or, if for natives as well, whether non-Christians were to be included. However, I was not long left in doubt on that point, for even before the house was furnished a native Brahmin woman (who had lost caste) was sent by some missionaries. It had been a venture of faith to start the home single-handed, having had no previous experience of work of the kind, and being yet so new to the country, and therefore having scarcely any knowledge of a vernacular. This led me to pray that God would set the seal of His approval upon the undertaking by giving me that soul as a first-fruit. It was a great request on account of the difficulty concerning the language, for she knew no English, but He graciously answered my prayer, and used me as His messenger to that dear sister, most literally putting words into my mouth for the purpose. Ten days after her admission, entirely of her own accord, she said with a beaming countenance, in the presence of the servants: 'To-day the Lord Jesus has come into my heart, and I am so happy.' She has remained true to Him, and has been trained as a hospital nurse.

"It was soon evident that the home was to be open to all, of any nationality or creed, who had gone astray, but professed a desire to reform. Since then the 'Home of Hope' has been closed, owing to Mrs. Gladwin's death, therefore ours, which is now known by the name of the 'Industrial Home for Women,' is the only institution of the kind in Western or Southern India. It has, as yet, been conducted on a very small scale, and we can humbly thank God for the encouragement He has given us to persevere in our efforts, by the consistent Christian lives of several who have now been out in the world for a couple of years. We have two houses, one for Europeans and Eurasions, and the other for natives; but both of them are overlooked by our neighbors, which fact is a great barrier to success. Our difficulties, which under any circumstances will be great, are increased from so many preventable causes, that my colleague, Miss Walker, and I are convinced that before we can venture upon any general aggressive work with good results, we must have a more retired situation for our home than could be obtained in Bombay, with space and arrangements to allow of judicious classification of the inmates. We have as yet, only followed up individual cases at the request of outsiders, and most of those we have had were sent us by missionaries and others. We feel that the time has come for a more extended effort to reach these sisters for whom Christ died, and for this purpose I have bought six acres of land on a healthy site just outside Poona (about 2000 feet above the sea) upon which suitable buildings can be erected. It is proposed to build rows of separate rooms for most of the inmates, and to have four blocks, each of which will be enclosed in its own compound, surrounded by a wall, two of them being for Europeans and Eurasians, and two for natives. In addition to these I hope to have two cloak-rooms, a creche, a small hospital, and a workers' bungalow with rooms for a few women of a superior class needing a refuge of the kind. The architect, Mr. Ashdown, who is kindly giving his services gratuitously, estimates the cost, with accommodation for seventy inmates, at nearly $30,000. I believe it will be better, and certainly more economical, to have one well-managed large home for those who speak English than to multiply small ones. Owing to the impossibility of finding openings in domestic service for women in India on any but the most limited scale, we shall have to turn our attention to some industries by means of which they may be enabled to earn an honest living after leaving us. There ought to be a home for natives in each district in which a different language is spoken. We shall need at least six European or American workers, in addition to myself, in order to run the home at Poona, the refuge at Bombay, and engage in local rescue work; but I trust the net cost of maintaining the mission will not exceed $3500 a year. I am thankful to be able to devote myself to the work without throwing on the charity any charge for my salary or expenses of any kind. We intend to keep up a small institution in Bombay, whence a worker will carry on aggressive work in the place; it will also serve as a receiving house, from which the women will be drafted to Poona. It should be remembered that this is a mission which helps on all other missions. Not only is it a direct testimony to the non-Christian community that immorality, whether in our countrymen or others, is contrary to the teaching and practice of our holy religion, but it also serves to exhibit, in a small degree, our Saviour's yearning over sinners combined with His hatred of sin. We are able to supplement the work of other missionaries by taking up the cases with which they are powerless to deal, and we have received women sent to us by agents of various missionary societies, some from great distances. An independent and undenominational governing body has been formed in England, the members of which will be responsible for the disposal of all funds collected from the public at home, and for the choice of future superintendents. Every cent that is contributed by the public goes direct to the work, nothing is deducted for organizing expenses of any kind, printing, traveling, etc. Up to date nearly $8000 has been received towards the building fund for the new homes at Poona and about $400 promised in annual subscriptions. In view of the urgent need, we propose to commence building as soon as we have $15,000 in hand."

Miss Richardson spoke at the World's Convention of Christian Workers at Boston in November. She is naturally diffident and it has been a great trial for her to go before the public, and she did not think of doing it until the needs of the work were greater than her private means could supply.

The set contains stamps of 15 different values and will commemorate the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. The stamps went on sale January 1 and will be kept on sale one year. As a source of revenue to the government the new stamps are expected to be very successful on account of the purchases of the stamp collectors. ## PALMER NEWS.

State Primary School Notes.

The farmers have finished filling the ice house with the second crop, which is about 15 inches thick.

Miss Hancock, one of the state agents, spent last night at the school.

Rev. Mr. Moulton talked to the children last Sunday. Next Sunday they will be addressed by Mr. Berle, who is to preach in the Congregational church.

The first of the mid-winter entertainments was given last evening in the chapel. It was arranged by Miss E. M. Fullington, assisted by Miss F. J. Dyer, and was a decided success. The following programme was rendered:

Salutatory.....Master John Kelley
Song.....Boys of the 5th School
Dialogue. "The Evening Visit".....
Masters Burns, Robinson, Welch, McCarty
Song. "Little Waiters".....
Misses Cornell, Bransfield, Lydden
Reading. "The Black Horse and His Rider".....Robert Sutcliff
Solos. { "My Bonnie" / "The Brook".....Wm. Jackson
Recitation. "The Brown Thrush".....
Timothy McCarty
Dialogue. Irish Equivocation.....
Wm. McAuliff, John Kelley
Song. "Kingdom Coming".....
Wm. Jackson and His Colored Troop
Dialogue. "No Peddlers Wanted".....
Sutcliff, Tyler, Borden, Sutherland
Declamation. "Summer".....Joseph Conroy
S. P. S. Drill.....Eight Boys
Tableau. "The Ice Queen".....
Tableau. "Good Night".....

The dialogues were all rendered in a very pleasing manner. The song "Kidgdom Coming" by six colored boys was a number that especially pleased the schools. The drill was arranged and conducted by Mr. Adams, and showed that the boys participating had given close attention and put hard work into it. They drilled for nearly fifteen minutes without a word being spoken. Mrs. Prentiss at the piano furnished the necessary music. Master Joseph Conroy in his declamation, "Summer," showed that he is also an acrobat of no mean ability. The tableau, the "Ice Queen," was the principal feature of the whole entertainment. The queen stood among cakes of ice and was surrounded by icicles of all shapes and sizes, the longest being nearly four feet in length. Misses Fullington and Dyer are to be congratulated on the success of this number alone.

Cold Weather No Hindrance.

In spite of the cold weather work on the plant of the Palmer and Monson Electric Company and on the changing of the grade crossings east of the village goes steadily on. At the Tenneyville crossing the grading is completed and the bridge is being put on. At the Blanchardville crossing the masonry work for the abutments of the bridge is not yet completed, though the excavating and filling for the roadway is all done with the exception of sloping one side of the cut north of the track, which cannot be done until travel over the present highway is discontinued. A bank wall next the property of W. B. Bennett remains to be built, but the earth is pretty hard for digging. At the electric company's new plant a force of from 75 to 90 men have been at work every day since the job was begun, and a vast deal is being accomplished in spite of the cold. The wheel pit and overflow of the canal are completed, and the upper end of the canal, where the water will enter the raceway, will be done in a few days. The ground has been pretty hard to use pick and shovel on, and dynamite has been used to loosen it up, after which it is taken out with a derrick if the pieces are large enough, or with shovel if it is fine. The men employed on the job are of all nationalities, Italian, Swede, Irish, German, of which the Swedes are on the whole perhaps the best, possible because the country they come from is a cold one and they are more accustomed to working in a low temperature than their fellows. The timber for the dam is much of it on the ground, and the work will be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Violently Insane.

Adolph Girouard of Bondsville was adjudged insane by the district court Tuesday and was taken to the asylum at Northampton. The attack was sudden, and no evidences of his malady were noticed until a few days ago. Monday night he came to Palmer and gave himself up, charging himself with having set the fire which burned the barn of Mrs. Thompson in Bondsville a few weeks ago, with some horses, wagons and hay owned by him. It was seen that he was not in his right mind, and officers watched with him through the night at the Converse House, where at intervals he was decidedly violent. When the officers attempted to take him from the court room Tuesday morning he fought furiously, and for a time it looked as if he would get the best of them, as they were somewhat handicapped by being cumbered with heavy overcoats, and in the struggle Judge Robinson received a severe kick on the shoulder, and Officer Healey narrowly missed a kick in the mouth. On his arrival at the hospital however he was perfectly quiet, realized where he was and said that it was all right. The case is considered a bad one, and there are some doubts as to his recovery. As to his statement that he set fire to the barn, little credence is given it by those who know the man; or if he did, that it was done while in his right mind, as he has always been considered an honest, sober, hard-working man.

A Palmer Man Killed in Connecticut.

George Whitcomb Merriam, who has lived in this town and is well known here, was killed by the cars in the yard of the Naugatuck road at Bridgeport, Ct., last Saturday. He was a freight brakeman, and was standing on the rear end of the rear car of the train. The engineer received the signal to back up, and started with such force as to jerk Merriam off the end of the car. As he struck the ground he grasped the brake beam and tried to pull himself out from under the wheels, but failed and the car passed over his head and body, two trucks of the car being thrown from the track. The deceased was a grandson of the original Joshua Whitcomb of Swanzea, Vt., his real name being George Whitcomb, but he was taken when eight months old by Mr. and Mrs. William Merriam of this place, they living in Palmer at that time, and was brought up by them, taking the name of Merriam. His father, a son of Joshua Whitcomb, enlisted in the 6th N. H. regiment at the beginning of the war in 1862, and was color-bearer when killed at the second battle of Bull Run.

There was a little brush on Main street Monday afternoon between horses owned by E. R. Pierce, H. P. Holden and Nelson Whiton, the honors going to the two former, about evenly divided.

This steady cold weather, when fires are run to their fullest capacity, is exceedingly trying on the chimneys, and if there is a defective place it is very likely to make the fact known. The village has fortunately been free from fires from this source thus far, and it is to be hoped will be spared the rest of the winter. Great care should be taken, however, and a constant watch kept.

George Ticknor, who 22 years ago was proprietor of the dining rooms in the old station of the New London Northern road at this place, is now running as Adams Express messenger between New London and Palmer, making his first trip Tuesday. He is renewing acquaintances among the "boys" of that time, with whom he was a universal favorite, and all of whom are glad to see him again.

A new innovation for Palmer, a lady drummer, struck town yesterday. She registered at the hotel the same as the male species of that persuasion, had a room in which to display her samples, hunted up her customers in the true drummerial style, and captured quite a batch of orders. She represented a well-known house which manufactures perfumes and toilet articles, and evidently understood her business as well as any of the fraternity on the road, and was very ladylike about it withal.

Fred Coleman suffered a severe, and what narrowly escaped being a serious accident, Monday noon. He was at work for the New London Northern road, and in coupling cars had his left arm caught between the deadwoods, the flesh below the elbow being split open for a space of about 8 inches, requiring 16 stitches to draw it together. Fortunately the arm was not low enough for the bone to be touched, or it would have been crushed to splinters, necessitating the loss of the arm. The wound was dressed by Dr. Holbrook, and the patient is doing well.

The past four weeks have been pretty snug winter weather, as far as temperature goes, the mercury standing close to zero nearly every morning, but Monday and Tuesday nights have been the banner nights thus far this winter, the mercury reaching 15° below Monday night, and 16° Tuesday. These figures are the average of the reports, which run all the way to 22° and 25° for the two nights. Fortunately there was no wind and the cold was not felt nearly so much as two weeks ago, when it was zero with a strong west wind. Water pipes have suffered however, and the householder who has not had experience in thawing them out is lucky indeed.

Sleigh-rides are in order now, and Saturday afternoon the grammar school scholars of Warren came over and took supper at the Converse House. Monday afternoon the grammar school of Ware visited the same hotel. The night was cold, and the horses which brought the party were restless; one which was not held while the driver was getting in took a little run down Commercial street, but no damage was done. The two ladies who had come in the sleigh were afraid to go back behind the horse and took passage in the barge with the crowd, while their escort was compelled to take a couple of the other boys along for company. A large party of Ware high school scholars had supper at the Nassowanno House the same evening.

Commencing with the first of February the American Express Company will do business over the southern end of the New London Northern road, between Palmer and New London, heretofore occupied exclusively by the Adams company. This will give the American a better route for its New York business, and will greatly benefit shippers whose packages cross the Boston and Albany road in transit. As the Adams company has heretofore controlled the territory south of that road, and the American the territory north of it and the business on it, there has always been two charges on such packages, whereas under the new arrangement of affairs there will be but one, if sent by the American. The Adams will not retire from the road, and messengers of both companies will probably run on the cars.

At the district court last Saturday George Welch was sent to the state farm at Bridgewater for vagrancy, the time being one year. On Monday Patrick Owen was arraigned for an assault, but had his case contined until the 23d. Tuesday Marciej Les paid $12 for an assault, and for drunkenness was sent to the house of correction for three months. Wednesday Wm. Welch, Jr., for the burning of a barn at Voluntown, Ct., on the 7th of last September, had his case continued until yesterday morning, when it was further continued until to-morrow. Welch has several illegal liquor cases hanging over him in Connecticut, and the barn burned was the property of Silas L. Barbour, who as grand juror signed complaints against Welch, and it is supposed the barn was burned out of revenge. Welch refused to return with the officer, and he has gone for requisition papers.

William Stokes was found dead in bed on Sunday morning. He retired as usual Saturday night, feeling apparently as well as ever. The remains were examined by Dr. Holbrook of Palmer. The deceased was quite a favorite with many in town, and the news of his death was quite a surprise. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon and was largely attended.

Medical Examiner Breck of Springfield performed an autopsy last Friday on the body of Mrs. Catherine Burns of this place, who fell on the sidewalk in that city the day before, and the result showed conclusively that death was the result of a blow on the head, and not due to apoplexy, as was claimed by the city physician. The heirs of Mrs. Burns will probably sue the city for damages.

The Thorndike minstrel show will be put on about Feb. 10th, and promises to eclipse all previous efforts in minstrelsy by local talent. The managers are pleased to announce the engagement of George Howard, an old-timer, and one who needs no introduction in this vicinity, as a first-class comedian. The Tuxedo first part will consist of several of the latest songs by local and out-of-town talent. The Palmer orchestra has been engaged to furnish music for the show and dance which will follow. Tickets will go on sale at the store of J. F. Luman and at the barber shop of J. W. Molloy in a few days, and can also be had of any member of the company.

Marciej Les, a Pole from Chicopee, came out to a christening Sunday, got drunk and attempted to thrash another Polander and his wife for amusement. He was arrested and sent to the house of correction. Beer or whisky can be had here in any quantity Sundays as well as any other day, license or no license not making any difference; it is as plenty as water.

Twenty years ago we had no railroad, no churches, no physician in this place, and only two stores. Now we have two railroads and four mails a day,—then only one,—now we have five dry goods and grocery stores, two millinery, one fancy goods, two confectionery and cigars, with papers and magazines, two barbers, an artist's studio, a drug store and two physians. Then we had to go to Palmer Depot or Thorndike for a doctor. Then we went to Methodist meeting in the old school house, now we have a Methodist church, a new French Catholic and an Irish Catholic church, and a new school house. We also have a public hall. The Boston Duck Company has built two new stone dams, one new mill and bleachery, a cloth room and a dyehouse. In 1883 the cloth room was burned, but was rebuilt. They have also built eight blocks on High street with two tenements in each, and three on Main street with two tenements in each, and a large block at the end of Main street with four tenements. Who says we have not progressed for a little place?

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 18, 1893.

Robert T. Swan, the commissioner of public records, is doing some valuable work for the state in the way of preserving old records. He visits towns and cities and in his report tells how he finds things. His mention of Palmer is as follows:

Wooden town hall two miles and a half from the clerk's store. The selectmen and assessors have a room there with a safe filled with later valuation books. The earlier lists and books, nearly complete from 1791, are in the closet of this room, not in a safe. Those before 1846 are bound. The clerk has a town safe which is filled with the current records, and records of births, marriages and deaths, in his store in a wooden building. The proprietors' records and some of the older town records are in the public library building, not in a vault. A copy, however, of the town proceedings to 1806 is in the clerk's safe. The record of town proceedings from 1807 to 1818 was burned. Marriage certificates and burial returns have been preserved since 1863. The collectors' records from 1869 to 1886 have been recovered."

Here is what he found at Ware:

"Brick town hall where there is a fine vault. The clerk has a town safe, new in 1892, in his store in a brick business block, where the current records and records of births, marriages and deaths are kept. The assessors have a safe containing their later valuation books, and the water board also has one. The other records and papers are kept in the vault. The oldest records have been rebound and are in good condition. The valuation books are nearly complete from 1819, and there are some for occasional years as early as 1786. Marriage certificates and burial returns have been preserved since 1866. The collectors' records have been returned so far as obtainable, and are complete from about 1855."

In the effort to shorten the sessions of the Legislature a thoroughly radical step is proposed and will doubtless be given a fair trial during the session. It abolishes the so-called "order of inquiry," and requires all persons who desire legislation to present bills or resolves which will show exactly what is desired. Under the old way it would be ordered, for instance, "that the committee on public health consider the expediency of further legislation to protect the public from the sale of impure milk," and under that there would be a hearing and the interested person would often have no bill, but would leave it to the committee to draw one. The case has two sides. It is demanding much to require that people, ignorant of law forms themselves, shall prepare a bill, or shall put themselves into the hands of a bill clerk who may or may not hit their case exactly. On the other hand, the present practice has led to abuse, because vague orders have been habitually offered upon which no legislation could be based. This is a matter, really, for the public to settle rather than the Legislature. If the new rule cuts off popular rights, then it must be repealed. If not, it will doubtless stand.

The finance committee made a good start by reporting on Thursday a batch of regular appropriation bills for the year,—a full week ahead of last year's record. They included $305,450 for compensation and mileage of the Legislature; $814,064.17 for the maintenance of the government the current year; $251,166.66 for the judiciary department; $443,500 for regular expenses authorized by the Legislature; $555,500 for state and military aid; $80,800 for salaries and expenses of the district police; $197,028.65 for several large sinking funds, and $53,850 for the legislative and executive departments.

Senator Mark of Plymouth, a strict temperance man, has followed up Henry Faxon's exposure of the failure of the "drunk" law of 1891 by a bill to repeal it and to substitute far more stringent legislation. That law was enacted under a pathetic plea for more leniency for drunkards, but seems to have failed badly in its purpose of promoting temperance.

No session of the Legislature was held on Monday on account of ex-Gov. Butler's funeral. All the time between the death and the funeral the governor's flag was kept at half-mast in token of honor to the former chief magistrate. It was because Butler had been governor that official notice of his death was taken, and that an escort of the state militia was ordered by the governor to attend the funeral. With the death of ex-President Hayes it has been different, for he had no other than a national connection with our state government. Ex-Presidents Grant and Arthur died during the recess of the Legislature, and so did President Garfield. So no occasion for an adjournment of the Legislature arose. It is not risking much to say that if the deaths of either Grant or Garfield had occurred during the session, the Legislature would have adjourned in honor of the memory of the departed. But at the session on Wednesday the proceedings were the same as they would have been if an ex-president had not just breathed his last. With the unexpected deaths of Butler and Hayes, people express surprise at Mr. Blaine's wonderful vitality.

If it were not that the election of United States Senator comes so seldom there would be little curiosity in watching the proceedings, for when the result has been completely discounted in advance by the action of the caucus, the routine of the election has little interest in itself. The Democrats were utterly powerless to accomplish anything. The vote in their caucus of 31 for Collins to 17 for Quincy and 7 for John E. Russell indicates how closely the Irish and Catholic element in the party is disposed to cling to people of its race and faith. Quincy's nomination was urged especially as a matter of party policy, and if ever a man has earned the gratitude of his party, he is the one. But the allegience to Collins was too strong, and in the vote for him is an indication of why the majority of the people of the state still refuse to entrust the Democracy with power. Russell has been chosen three times by independent Republican votes, but not another man on the Democratic state ticket has been formidable for his Republican opponent. It is not easy to foresee how the present situation will be materially altered for years.

After the election of Lodge as senator by a strict party vote, the remaining formality was for the two branches to meet in joint convention Wednesday noon, compare their journals, announce the result and adopt the necessary formality to authorize Gov. Russell to issue the certificate of election to Mr. Lodge. Ten years ago exactly George F. Hoar was reelected, and Gov. Butler was compelled, under the law, to sign his credential. Considering the relations and natures of the two men, the feelings of Butler in performing this duty may be imagined.

Much business has been put in already, and there will evidently be an abundance of work. The first hearing has been assigned for Jan. 24, and it will be upon the proposed abolition of the executive council. This is not an early start. If the plan for a session of 100 days were adopted, it would be found that one-seventh of the time had passed before a hearing was held. The new vote to shorten the session by requiring every petition to be accompanied by a bill (which is provided by the clerk) is said to involve an increase of one-half in the heavy printing bills of the Legislature, and to cost so much that the Legislature will have to adjourn by May 1 to make things even. LANDON.

NEWS MATTERS IN GENERAL.

A horrible sleighing accident took place at Lonsdale, R. I., Wednesday morning, when eight of a pleasure party were killed by a train at a grade crossing and eight more seriously hurt.

The cold of the past week has extended all over the United States, causing intense suffering and severe hardship in many localities. England has suffered seriously, too, from the same cold snap.

Warden Lovering of the Charlestown state prison has resigned, "to be relieved from the weary burden of incongruous conditions which attach to the position of warden and handicap him in the performance of his duties."

The cases of Holmes and Coy, the Western Massachusetts murderers, were considered by the governor and council yesterday, and it was decided not to interfere with Coy's sentence. The case of Holmes was continued for one week, but there is little probability of any change in his sentence.

Horace Smith, of the firm of Smith & Wesson of Springfield, died at his home in that city early Sunday morning. By his will half a million of dollars are given to charitable objects; among the institutions benefited are the Springfield City Library, $50,000; Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, $25,000; Hampden County Children's Aid Society, $5000.

Rutherford B. Hayes, the 19th president of the United States, died suddenly at his home in Fremont, O., Tuesday night. While not a great statesman or general, of him is true that which can be said of few men of his prominence,—there was no stain upon his record, personal and private, or public and official. Grover Cleveland is now the only surviving ex-president.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Another Breach of Promise Suit.

The gossips of the town have another breach of promise suit to discuss, Miss Belle Niles having begun proceedings against Blanchard Clifford for trifling with her affections and wounding her feelings to such an extent that only $10,000 will be sufficiently healing. Miss Niles has conducted a dress making establishment in Monson for years, having seen about forty summers, while Mr. Clifford is a widower of about 65, who was formerly foreman at the quarry of the Flynt Granite Co., but is not now engaged in active labor. The attentions of Mr. Clifford to Miss Niles have been noticed by the neighbors and commented upon, especially as they seemed to have been discontinued for some time, but the outcome is one which created a genuine surprise when it became known. Miss Niles has a diamond ring and other articles presented her by Mr. Clifford, and at one time expected to sell her business to Palmer parties in view of contemplated marriage, but for some reason did not. Mr. Clifford has placed his real estate in the hands of his son, and at the present time neither of the parties to the suit are in town. Coming so soon after the Josie Doyle case it makes Monson somewhat notorious in the line of breach of promise suits.

McDonald—Cantwell.

Tuesday morning William E. McDonald, book-keeper for the Flynt Building and Construction Company of Palmer, and Miss Mary E. Cantwell, organist in St. Patrick's church, were united in marriage by Rev. John F. Lee, assisted by Rev. William Foley. The ceremony was celebrated with a high nuptial mass. Mrs. Holland of St. Stephen's church, Worcester, presided at the organ, and rendered Mendelssohn's wedding march as the couple entered and Lohengrin's bridal march as they left the church. During the service the Ave Maria was finely rendered. Miss Joanna Cantwell, a sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Daniel Gallcher of Springfield was best man. Immediately after the ceremony a reception and breakfast was held at the bride's home. The honeymoon will be spent in Philadelphia and Washington, after which they will return to Palmer. The presents were numerous and costly.

Ran Away from Home.

Effie Aldrich about sixteen years of age, disappeared Tuesday, and occasioned her friends considerable trouble before she was finally found and returned. It was at first thought that she had eloped with a Palmer young man who has been paying her considerable attention, but he proved to the satisfaction of her big brothers that he knew nothing of the matter. It was then feared that she had gone to Canada to enter a convent as she has threatened to do, and the search was continued to Springfield, where it was found that she had checked her baggage to Hartford, where she was finally found and returned to her home. She has not always agreed with her mother in all things, and it was probably for some reason of this kind that she left home.

Orcutt was compelled to respond to an encore, and the violin solos by Messrs. Merchant and Brown were well received, as also the instrumental solo by Miss Walker and the duet by the Misses Gage and Cushman.

There is considerable of interest now going on in Silver Street. Monday evening Rev. F. S. Hatch addressed the people on "Taxation," and assisted in dedicating the new bookcase. About $27 have been raised for books, beside the work of making the case, and it is the intention to start a small library there. Otto C. Davis, Elias Warner and Linus Hatch were appointed a committee to purchase books.

E. D. Cushman's fine chestnut mare, "Maid," ran last Saturday, throwing R. A. Beckwith, who was driving, out. The horse started toward home, running down High street, but turned down the hill by the Congregational church and ran into C. A. Orcutt's yard, jumping fences and walls and breaking the sleigh into splinters. The horse was badly cut, the wounds being dressed by Veterinary Surgeon Winter of Palmer.

Rev. E. F. Wheeler, pastor of Grace Union church, read his resignation last Sabbath, to take effect February 1st, when Mr. Wheeler intends to remove to St. Louis, Mo., having received a call to the Church of The Redeemer at that place. As a pastor and a gentleman Mr. Wheeler has made for himself many life-long friends, having ingratiated himself into the good will of all who know him. That he will be sadly missed from his usual place will but faintly express the feelings of the members and congregation of his church, and that his work in his new field will be abundantly fruitful is the wish of all.

A trotting track has been laid out on Hardwick pond nearly three quarters of a mile long, with several tracks side by side. There were a few trial trips made on it Monday, when Henry M. Clark's new horse, "Johnny Jones," came in ahead. If the cold weather holds it is expected there will be lively times there.

The report the first of the week that Smith & Murray of Springfield had bought out A. Bryson's dry goods store proved not to be true; but it is now reported on good authority that Smith & Murray have taken a ten years' lease of the first floor and basement of Trench's block, and will open about the middle of February, under the name of D. Robertson & Co., with a large stock of dry goods, carpets, cloaks, etc. Meantime the store is to be fitted for heating by steam, lighting by electricity, and all modern improvements.

The good news has come at last that there is to be a reduction in the water rate of from 10 to 20 per cent, the minimum meter rate being $8, instead of $10, as heretofore. This allows each consumer to use 32,000 gallons per year, or nearly 88 gallons for every day in the year, which is largely in excess of that used in an ordinary family, so that by putting in a meter extra faucets may be used at one's convenience, with but little extra cost. This rate applies to their using less than 3000 feet per quarter, larger consumers having a rate even lower than this.

Admitted the Facts.

Newspaper editors have to be very careful in opening their columns for statements. But aware that the Dr. Miles Medical Co. are responsible we make room for the following testimonial from R. McDougall, Auburn, Ind., who for two years noticed a stoppage or skipping of the pulse, his left side got so tender he could not lie on it, his heart fluttered, he was alarmed, went to different doctors, and no relief, but one bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure cured him. The elegant book, "New and Startling Facts," free at LeGro & Lynde's. It tells all about heart and nervous diseases and many wonderful cures. (3)

How to Become Fleshy.

Dr. Miles' Nervine not only cures all nervous diseases, headache, blues, nervous prostration, sleeplessness, neuralgia, St. Vitus dance, fits and hysteria, but also builds up the body. "I am pleased to say that after years of intense suffering with nervous disease, headache and prostration, I tried Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and in two weeks gained eight pounds in weight. I could not lie down to sleep, but now sleep perfectly easy, and am still improving wonderfully. Cannot say enough for the Nervine.—Mrs. L. B. Millard, Dunkirk, N. Y." "One customer used Nervine and gained fifteen pounds in flesh," say Brown & Maybury, Cortland, N. Y. Trial bottles and elegant book free at LeGro & Lynde's. (3)

"Now is the winter of our discontent made glorious summer" by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This wonderful medicine so invigorates the system and enriches the blood that cold weather becomes positively enjoyable. Arctic explorers would do well to make a note of this.

If afflicted with scalp diseases, hair falling out, and premature baldness, do not use grease or alcoholic preparations, but apply Hall's Hair Renewer.

To preserve a youthful appearance as long as possible, it is indispensable that the hair should retain its natural color and fullness. There is no preparation so effective as Ayer's Hair Vigor. It prevents baldness and keeps the scalp clean, cool and healthy.

Honest.

In these days of adulteration and fraud, in all branches of business and pursuits, it is pleasing to know that there is one medicine prepared which is strictly pure. Such a medicine is Suphur Bitters in curing scrofula; you can depend on them every time. W. B. Everts A. M., Charleston S. C.

It is Useless

for young ladies who are troubled with freckles, pimples, moth and tan and a bad skin generally to use liquid paints or dry powders, for they only make the skin look well for the time being. To have a good complexion you must have pure blood. Use Sulphur Bitters and your skin will be fair and complexion rosy.—Young Ladies' Magazine.

SECOND WEEK OF THE LIMITED SALE.

If a thing is worth doing at all, it is worth doing well. A week ago to-day we began to offer certain things gathered from our own stocks and others that would not fail to tempt you—in most cases giving sixty cents the buying power of a dollar.

Great selling has resulted.

To continue the outflow of goods, bargains have been sought and brought, sometimes from our own stocks, sometimes from others—but brought they have been, and trade has kept its course with a rush and stocks are being cleared out thoroughly.

Muslin Underwear.

The great sale will continue this week in full force. The number and amount of sales is astonishing. The hardest thing for women to understand is how such prices are possible. There's the cost of the cloth and the cost of making, and here's the finished garment for less than the two foot up.

For example. Try home work on this gown at 69 cents. You'll wonder more than ever at the prices.

Second floor.

Brocaded Silks.

Here's a tale short and sweet. Brocaded silks ranging from $1 to $2 a yard—choice while they last 55 cents; and there is a choice, most decidedly. Those who come first get it.

This is not an offering of only a few yards. It is our entire stock with but a single exception.

Left aisle.

Dress Goods.

The gathering and opening of bargains goes vigorously forward. This week we bring to the front a catalogue of some several hundred pieces of seasonable fabrics just received.

Cotton-and-wool homespun mixture, 36 inches wide, of a quality never before under 25 cents—in this sale at 19 cents a yard, or $1.33 a dress pattern; worth $1.75. Seven mixtures.

Striped camel's-hair effects, sixteen different sorts, never before under 50 cents—in this sale at 37 1-2 cents, or $2.63 a dress pattern; worth $3.50.

Broken check suiting, all wool and good wool, in seven of the coming spring effects, worth 50 cents—in this sale at 39 cents a yard, or $2.73 a dress pattern; worth $3.50.

Fancy worsted serge, 42 inches wide, never before under 75 cents—in this sale at 55 cents a yard, or $3.30 a dress pattern; worth $4.50. Thirteen colors and black

Whipcord diagonal, 38 inches wide, never before under 75 cents—in this sale at 55 cents a yard, or $3.85 a dress pattern; worth $5.25. Five choice colors and black.

Fourteen Pounds in Two Weeks.

Happy Experience of a Railroad Man.

Mr. Peter Owens of Greenbush, N. Y., one of the oldest and best known engineers on the H. R. R. R., writes: "A few years ago I was taken sick. My trouble was general debility, pain in the back, blinding sick headache, and dyspepsia, caused by irregular habits of eating and the constant jar of the engine. I was losing flesh daily, and had no appetite; had consulted my physician, took his medicine, but continued to grow so much worse that I concluded my days of labor were about over. At this critical time I was advised to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I did, and from the very first bottle I began to grow better, my appetite returned, and for the first two weeks I gained over a pound a day. I most heartily recommend it to all troubled as I was, for I know it is a medicine worthy of all confidence."

Hundreds of persons of sedentary habits are troubled with constipation and kidney disease, two of the most common ailments; they ought to be attended to, for they never of themselves get better. Mr. Geo. A. Wagner, Palatine Bridge, N. Y., and one of the Wagner Drawing Room Car Co's popular conductors, found it the only cure for constipation and kidney troubles; it also cured him of an obstinate case of catarrh of the bladder. Have you symptoms of dyspepsia, painful weight in the stomach after eating, headache, constipation, pain in the back? If so, do not delay in taking Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, as it may save you from some dreadful disease that might end in death.

THE NEXT MORNING I FEEL RIGHT AND MY COMPLEXION BETTER. My doctor says it acts gently on the stomach, liver and kidneys, and is a pleasant laxative. This drink is made from herbs, and is prepared for use as easily as tea. It is called

She Plays the Piano.

There's a lady above me who lives in a flat;
I wish that the demons would take her.
If I put it too strongly in speaking like that,
I'll amend so that Satan may shake her.
She doesn't care "shucks" if I register kicks
And blacken the air with profaning;
To her little piano she cleverly sticks,
Tho' the neighborhood's pining and paining.

(There she goes.)
Ting tum, ting tum, ting tum, ting,
Ting tum, ting tum, ting tum, ting.
(She sings "Maid of Athens."
"Mai dof Athen zere we pa-r-t,
Gi vo gi vme back my h-e-a-r-t.
(Ting, ting, ting.)
Or since tha tas lef tmy breast,
Kee pit now and ta kth' rest.
Oh, hear mi vow (ting, ting, ting,)
Befo ri go (ting, ting, ting.)
Ohe rmi vow befo ri go-o-o-o!"
(Something breaks.)

She murders Beethoven and Mendelssohn, too,
In a style very much Jack the Ripper,
And Chopin and Mozart she'll gleefully woo
When her mood is inclined to be chipper.
Romanzas and nocturnes are five o'clock teas,
While rondos she gobbles for dinner,
You can talk as you like and remark what you please,
But the girl in this flat is a winner.

(She's at it again.)
Ting, ting, te ting, ting, te ting,
Tiddle, ding, de ding, ding, ding.

(She warbles "Sally in Our Alley."
"Aw vall, thelay, deesin our land,
There znone likepre ty-Sallee-ee-ee;
(Ting, ting,)
She is the da-a-rling aw vmy heart,
And shee liv, zdown in, our a-allee-ee-ee.
There znot a mai den in our land
Tha tsaf so swee tas Sal-al-ee, ee, ee,
For she zth darlin aw-aw-aw-aw-aw-aw-aw-aw vmy ha-a-a-a-art,
And she liv (ting), zdown in (ting), our a-a-lee-le-ee-ee."

Paderewski, the Pole, is all right in his way,
And impossible music can handle,
But compared with the girl in the flat he's a jay,
And against her he can't hold a candle.
The music ain't sweet or pathetic withal.
But the noise is so diff'rent and roomy
That I cannot help liking the dame for her gall,
And the fates that escorted her to me.

(Ah, a song; we'll listen.
"On Sunday night we take a walk,
On Monday we take beer,
On Tuesday night we take a bath,
And so from year to year. (Horrors!)
On Wednesday we play poker,
On Thursday night we roam;
But there is no flies on Gallagher
When Mary Murphy's home."

I've mentioned a few of the ballads she yells,
Just to show the extent of my patience,
And the very best part of my nature rebels
'Gainst this scourge of all peoples and nations.
But a blessed particular solace I've got;
When she plunges and pummels and bellows,
I often retire to the rear of my lot
And warble and garble, as follows:

(As sung by Dave Martin and T. H. Carter,)
Comrades, comrades,
Ever since we were men,
Sharing each other's claptrap,
Booming old Grandpa Ben.
Comrades when Blaine spoke at Ophir,
Frying whate'er might be fried;
When danger threatened the measly old wildcat
Was there by my side.

A PROMINENT MAN.

One of Albany's Ablest and Best Known Citizens.

Some Interesting Inside History in the Life of a Business Man.

He Speaks Strongly and Straight to the Point.

The successes of prominent business men are always of great interest to the people.

So, also, when a well-known and honored man is in trouble through illness, not only his friends, but all who know him by reputation, are deeply interested in his welfare.

Mr. Seth E. Parsons is one of the leading business men of Albany, N. Y., and is widely known and highly esteemed as a citizen of sterling integrity, with the energy and force of character characteristic of our American business men.

Seen at his home, 22 Park street, by our paper's representative, he expressed himself in terms of the greatest gratification that he had escaped possibly a most serious nervous difficulty which might have prostrated him.

"I was very nervous," he said. "I could not hold my hands still, especially my left hand; there was an involuntary contraction of the muscles and movement of the fingers.

MR. SETH E. PARSONS.

"My food troubled me very soon after eating. My kidneys and bladder were affected so it was difficult to urinate freely.

"I used the celebrated medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and without being tedious reciting my experience, I can say that these difficulties have left me, and my nerves are quiet, and my food does not distress me.

"I feel without hesitation in saying that I think Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy has produced these favorable results."

We have heard of many remarkable cures being effected by this remedy, but when we learn directly and from his own words of its curing a man of Mr. Parson's prominence and standing, we believe that such a cure should be to all a guarantee of the great curative powers of the remedy, and should influence all thinking persons who are suffering from disease to use this truly remarkable medicine. It can be purchased for $1 at any druggist's, and we know it is purely vegetable and harmless.

What gives us most confidence in the remedy is the fact that it is the discovery and prescription of Dr. Greene of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the eminent specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, and that the doctor offers to all sufferers free consultation with him, either by calling at his office or writing him.

A Sister to All of 'Em.

Rather inclined to be pretty,
Rather inclined to be good;
Rather inclined to a vague, undefined
Feeling of sweet sisterhood
Toward the young fellows who love her;
When they have asked for her hand,
Rather inclined to a vague, undefined
Feeling they don't understand.
Fact is, this maiden can't help it:
Natural born coquette,
Rather inclined not to make up her mind
To marry, that is, not just yet.
Sister she'll be to them all, and
Loving, and faithful and true;
Rather inclined round her finger to wind
About—say a dozen or two.

A GENUINE HERO.

A sky of opal and gold, a deep trellised veranda, a novel, and a hammock slung at the most comfortable of angles. With these conditions it was scarcely strange that Halcyon Hartford swayed delightfully between dreamland and the real world that June afternoon, with the fleecy gold of her hair, all guiltless of pin or comb, and the bell sleeves, falling enchantingly away from her round white arms, while one trim slippered foot hung from the edge of the hammock.

"Halcyon! Halcyon! Where are you?"

It was one of those exasperating voices which, once having been sweet, had now a vibrant jar to its tones, painfully akin to shrillness.

Halcyon frowned a little and raised herself on one elbow.

"Oh, Aunt Hal, don't scream so! I was just in a dream of delight."

"Well, you should have answered then!"

Aunt Hal came out of the wide, shady hall with an effusive swing of her draperies and seated herself in a bamboo chair close to the hammock.

She was comically like her niece—at least as much as a woman of thirty-eight could be like a maid of eighteen. There was the same yellow luxuriance of hair, but harsher, drier and suggestive of dye; the same pink and white complexion, artificially heightened; similar features, cruelly sharpened by the inexorable hand of time, and the teeth just one degree too white and regular to be real.

The white dress she wore was painfully trying, and she was compelled to use gold-rimmed eye glasses as she held up a letter to the view of her niece.

"What has happened?" drowsily demanded the latter, lifting a pair of blue eyes, fringed with dark lashes.

"The strangest thing!"

"Another offer of marriage?" hazarded Halcyon, settling upon the unlikeliest thing which could, in her opinion, happen.

"How did you guess?" with a little exultant cackle. "Exactly. The dear, foolish lad—and he so much younger than I! Why he couldn't have been twenty-one when he went to Bombay, and I was at least thirty then—"

"Thirty-five, Aunt Hal," said Halcyon, the merciless.

"Was it as much as that? Well, he seemed desperately in love then, though of course I never took any notice of the child. But suppose in that country of blackamoors one can't help thinking about all the women one has ever known at home, and he has written me two or three letters"——

"Has he?"

Halcyon sat straight up in the hammock now. Her blue eyes glowed. The heat had brought a flush to her cheek which all Aunt Hal's carmine saucers could not rival.

"But I never told you," said the elder beauty, because I remembered that there was a sort of boy and girl affair between you and Charlie Blesson when you were at boarding school, and I thought you would be nettled. And here's the proposal at the last, dear—with his photograph inclosed.

"Let me see it."

What a brave, good face it was—slightly older and sterner than she had looked upon when the Avancanian sailed away three years ago, but yet so strong and manly!

"Shall you accept him?"

Aunt Hal nibbled coquettishly at the edge of the envelope; the new false teeth gleamed in a smile.

"I—I—think—I—shall!"

"And you fourteen years older than he is!"

"People don't think about such things as they used to do," reasoned Miss Hartford, the elder. "Eros is immortal, you know."

Halcyon sank back into the hammock, and reopened her book.

"You must do as you please, of course," said she. "After that quotation about Enos, I have not a suggestion to offer."

"Jealous, poor darling!" thought Aunt Hal, with a thrill of pity. And she said:

"Well, of course one can't help those things happening to one, and your time will come soon, dear, never fear."

"It's a good thing," she added to herself, "she does not know anything about dear old Judge Flostroy. There's a difference in age, if you please, and the old pet is so infatuated about me! An old man's darling or a young man's slave—which?"

While Halcyon thought on her side:

"The silly goose! He has done it now! He has been making love to Aunt Hal, thinking he was courting me. Oh, I thought he knew her name was the same as mine. Didn't she stand god mother to me at St. Chrysoline's and give me a coral and bells and an embroidered christening robe? And now he actually proposed to her! Well, if he is the man I take him to be, he'll stand by his colors, cost him what it may. A man who could walk up to the cannon's mouth at Bey-Idonna surely won't shrink, even from Aunt Hal. And I'd rather know that he was a true hero th-than have a poltroon for my husband!"

And Halcyon turned her face toward the pillow and cried great sparkling tears like dewdrops.

* * * * * *

"So you're back again, lieutenant? Beg pardon; I'd orter said colonel, I do suppose," said the old cab driver at the station, whom Charlie Blesson had remembered ever since he was a child. Well, I declare I shouldn't hardly have knowed ye! And come home to be married, eh?"

Blesson bit his lips, but he laughed carelessly. Jonas Hopper was a privileged individual, like the court jesters of old.

"How did you know, Hopper?"

"Oh, I dunno, Miss Hartford, she's been gettin' ready to be married this long time." said Jonas, hoisting the colonel's luggage on the back of the wagon. "And dressmakers and milliners they will talk, you know, though I'm told Miss Hal took great pains to hide it."

"Did she?" (Aside: "The darling!")

And a fine woman she is, colonel," officiously added Jonas, as he pushed in the last iron-clamped trunk. "A very fine woman, considering her age. I wonder she ain't married long ago."

Colonel Blesson opened his sleepy black eyes wide.

"Why, man, who in the world are you talking about?"

"Why, Miss Hal Hartford, to be sure."

"Miss Halcyon or Miss Halliana?"

"There ain't no Miss Halliana," said Jonas. "They're both the same name, but we call the aunt Miss Hal and the neice Miss Halcyon. My daughter, she's lady's maid there, and I'd orter know, if any one does."

"And which of them is it that is going to be married?" breathlessly queried Blesson.

"Why, the old un, in course! Beg pardon!" hurriedly added Jonas, "I mean Miss Hal. Polly, she tells me there's twenty-four different gowns ordered, let alone the jackets and parasols and ten-button kid gloves fit to make your hair stand on end."

People do not discover it until too late, that the so-called washing powders not only eat up their clothes, but ruin their skin, and cause rheumatism. Use nothing but Dobbins' Electric Soap. Have your grocer keep it.

"And Miss Halcyon—the young lady," cried the Colonel; "she is engaged too?"

"Not as any one knows on. That ail, colonel? Got your telescope bag? Then we'd better be movin."

Colonel Blesson pondered seriously all the way up to Hartford Cedars, oblivious of Jonas incessant stream of talk. Could it be possible? No; that was utter nonsense! And yet—"

He strained his eyes as he approached the house. Surely golden-haired Halcyon would be there smiling to meet him!

But no. In her place stood a middle-aged charmer, rouged and powdered, with hair gleaming meretriciously and teeth just a size too large for a thin-lipped mouth.

In one hand she held his love-breathing letter, in the other his photograph. And during that second his heart sank like lead.

He did not know—ah, how much more difficult would it have been to bear had he known!—that Halcyon Hartford's eyes were surreptitiously watching him from the the honeysuckle-garlanded casement beyond.

"Dear Charles," the elderly damsel said, "you are here at last!",

He set his teeth, drew one long breath and allow her to slip a caressing hand though his arm and lead him into the house, muttering some hoarse acknowledgment of her coquettish smiles.

"I've brought this upon myself," he thought, "and I must endure it. The lady is not to blame—no, she is not to blame."

"He is a hero," Halcyon thought; "yes, a hero."

And then she burst into a passion of tears and ran up stairs to her room.

"But now I've got you fairly here," lisped Aunt Hal, more determinedly youthful than ever, "I'm really afraid, dearest Charles, that there's a great disappointment in store for you."

"Eh?"

The young man had sat down in a rather listless manner. Aunt Hal held onto his hand, still all teeth and smiles.

"And I may as well tell you at once," said she, "that I'm engaged to Judge Flostroy, of the superior court. Of course, if I had known of your attachment in time, there's no saying—"

"Oh, pray don't let me interfere with any existing arrangements," said Blesson, jumping up eagerly. "Perhaps under the circumstances you will let me have my photograph back."

Just then there came a ring at the door below as the maid announced:

"Judge Flostroy, miss, if you please."

Before the slow and ponderous steps of the approaching visitor could reach the room Aunt Hal had thrust the photograph into Blesson's hand.

"A-hem-m!" sonorously coughed the luminary of the superior court.

Aunt Hal tripped smilingly forward.

"Glad to see you, judge," she cooed. "This is my old playmate, Colonel Blesson, just arrived from India. I dare say, Colonel, you'll find Halcyon somewhere about the house."

"Disposed of in short order," muttered Colonel Blesson. Great heavens! what have I done to deserve such luck?"

Two hours afterwards the young lovers sat on the veranda watching the evening stars rise over the hills, while the Judge's basso profundo still rolled in the sitting room like distant thunder.

"But wasn't it a narrow escape?" gasped the young colonel, holding the girl's slim hand in his.

"Would you really have married her?" Halcyon asked.

"As a gentleman there was no escape for me, under the circumstances."

"But would you really have married her?"

"Yes, I would!" with sternly set teeth and knitted brows.

"Then I'll marry you, Colonel Blesson," whispered Halcyon, "because you are a genuine hero, and because," with an arch glance, "I really think you need a wife to take charge of you."

"After the episode of to-day," said Colonel Blesson, "I really think I do."—New York Evening Sun.

A MISTAKE!

EASY TO MAKE BUT SERIOUS IN ITS CONSEQUENCES—THRILLING DETAILS OF A REMARKABLE NARROW ESCAPE—MAY BE A SURPRISE TO SOME, BUT A WHOLESOME LESSON TO ALL.

A mistake. Did you ever think, or do you fully realize what a mistake may mean? The engineer makes a mistake in the signals, and the train freighted with its hundreds of lives is dashed to destruction. The pilot makes a mistake in his location, and the ship is wrecked upon a hidden and dangerous reef. A doctor makes a mistake in diagnosing the disease, and while treating the wrong affection allows the true disease to gain headway, and perhaps become incurable. A mistake is often fatal. A friend of the writer, a most estimable lady by the name of Miss S. H. Conrad, who lives at Holyoke, Mass., came near being the victim of a mistake of the above character. She fell very ill, and her trouble was pronounced first one disease and then another, and meanwhile growing constantly worse. In speaking of her affection she said: "For years I was troubled with weak nerves and a bad stomach. Some called it heart disease, others congestion of the liver, and others still, malaria, inflammation of the stomach, etc. I was confined to my bed; could keep nothing on my stomach, and ached so intensely all through the system that life was almost unendurable. ## DESPERATE EXPERIENCE

OF A BRATTLEBORO LADY—FOR YEARS SHE SUFFERED WITHOUT HOPE—A COMPLICATION THAT BAFFLES ALL THE PHYSICIANS CURED BY DR. ROYCE.

A cured and grateful patient is a physician's best friend. And one who has been rescued, as it were, from the very gates of death, is the best recommendation of the doctor's skill. The lady whose case we detail below is one of those who can attest the power of Dr. Royce and his vegetable treatment over the ravages of disease. Mrs. C. E. Hughes of Brattleboro was for a number of years a most abject sufferer from neuralgia of the ovaries and uterus, spinal disease and dyspepsia. She had also a serious heart trouble, which on several occasions had nearly cost her life. To-day Mrs. Hughes is perfectly well, and gives to Dr. Royce the credit of saving her life. It is impossible to convey a correct idea of the suffering which this lady underwent by mere words. Only those who have been similarly situated can comprehend her situation. The pain during the attack of neuralgia was simply excruciating and often threw the patient into spasms of the greatest severity. The dyspepsia also caused frequent attacks of spasmodic cramping of the limbs, and the heart difficulty, as we have already said, had nearly caused her death on several occasions. Her general health was of course entirely broken down, her appetite was almost entirely gone, and her stomach was in such condition that the simplest food caused the greatest distress. Mrs. Hughes became reduced to the shadow of her former self from lack of nourishment and loss of sleep, and at the time she came under Dr. Royce's treatment was in a thoroughly worn out and despondent condition. The patient had been under the care of a number of the best physicians she could find during her illness, but had not obtained relief from her sufferings. As a last resort, after years of misery, she came to Dr. Royce and placed her case in his hands. From the first she began to improve. The pain left her for the first time, the cramping ceased, her heart became regular in its work and her appetite returned. She gained rapidly in health and strength under the treatment and in three months was as well as ever in her life. Should any one ask if this cure was permanent, we will say that these events took place four years ago, and Mrs. Hughes is still in the best of health. The lady may be referred to at the above address. Dr. Royce treats all complaints with like success, and invites all the suffering to come and see him. Consultation, examination and advice free. All cases treated for $5 a month and medicines furnished. Located at 305½ Main street, Springfield, Mass. Office hours 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Patients at a distance treated successfully by mail. 44

"MEND YOUR WAYS"

Has been the advice of many a father to his wayward son, and good advice it was, too.

Mending one's ways is often times the making of a good man out of a shiftless boy,—an operation often requiring great skill on the part of the father.

Mending does a great good to whatever it is applied, providing, of course, it is properly applied, and at the proper time.

Mending one's clothing, for instance, when properly done, adds a great deal to its looks and wearing qualities.

We do mending properly and at a nominal charge. Bring in your torn or frayed garment and test our ability, or better still, drop us a postal, and we will call for it and return it when mended.

Sunday Talk in the Horse Sheds.

(Old Gray comments on the service to his mate)

'Tisn't so much that the Sunday harness never seems to fit,
That the collar is tight and the check-rein draws on this queer, new-fangled bit,
Nor yet that the pasture looks greener, somehow, this sort of a half-rest day,
That galls me most, Old Roan, but the things I hear the people say.

My shoulders ache and my knees are stiff, and it makes me want to fight
When I hear 'em sing, "O day of rest! O day of joy and light!"
For we started late, and to get there soon we had to trot our best;
"Welcome," — now hear 'em — "delightful morn, sweet day of sacred rest!"

Now Parson's reading the Scripture, "Remember the Sabbath day—
In it thou shalt not do any work,"—"Amen" the people say;
"Thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy cattle, thy ox, or thy ass"—
Don't seem to exempt the horses, eh? So we'll let the lesson pass.

Can't you step over a little? The sun comes in this side—
And it don't say a word about the wife; I reckon that's why they decide
That Sunday's a day of rest on the farm from the labors of every-day life
For everything that the Lord hath made—except the horses and wife.

Now, that's our hymn; come, wake up, Roan, that means us, I'll be bound—
"Awake my soul"—sing louder'n that; some souls sleep mighty sound—
"Awake my soul, and with the sun"—that's meant for me and you—
"Thy daily course of duty run"—Well, that's just what we do.

"A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast"—I'd smile
At the parson's text, but if I did they'd hear me for a mile;
For I trotted the last ten minutes lame—I'd picked up a hard, sharp stone,
An' could hear the old man growlin' because his seat was "hard as bone."

"Could I but climb where Moses stood"—but the half of them wouldn't climb;
They'd pile in the wagon full 's 'twould hold an' ride up every time;
If they had to walk they'd do's they did when your pastern joint was sprained—
They'd say 'twas too fur, an' stay at home, like they did the times it rained.

I'm goin' to write a hymn some day, an' we'll sing it out in the sheds—
"Welcome, delightful morn that pours the rains upon our heads;
Welcome the slush, the snow that drifts, the mud that irritates,
The storms that bring a Sabbath rest to the cattle within the gates."

His voice was hushed, for the notes of song rose on the hallowed air—
"Praise God from whom all blessings flow"—thanksgiving, praise and prayer;
"Praise Him all creatures here below"—man, beast, and bird and every thing—
With the possible exception of the farmer's wife, who, having remained at home to prepare a dinner of chicken soup, roast beef, beets, onions, roasting ears, salad, pudding, two kinds of pie, and fruit, for her husband, three sons, four daughters, the pastor, his wife and two children, the district secretary of the Home Mission Society, a distant relative from the city come out to spend the day, and two hired men, had very little time, and not much breath, and possibly not an everlastingly superabundant inclination to sing.

THE CHIDESTER BROTHERS.

The first time I ever heard of the Chidester Brothers, Molly Hayes spoke of them to me.

"Have you seen the Chidester Brothers?" she asked, never giving me a chance to answer. "Oh, Jennie, they are too splendid for anything! They are as handsome as they can be!"

"Who are they?" I asked.

"Oh, they have been in town about a week. They are at Tomlinson's and they drive a beautiful pair of blacks in a light wagon."

"But who are they? I declare, Molly, you never stop talking long enough to say anything."

Molly laughed. She has the sweetest temper, and did stop a moment.

"They are," she said, slowly, "oh, I don't know who they are except just the Chidester Brothers; nor what they are, except—dentists."

"Dentists?" I exclaimed.

"Yes, dentists. They are traveling from place to place in their own carriage, and practising as they go. They enjoy traveling, and like to study the country and the people, you know. They have two offices at Tomlinson's, but they drive out into the country and call, and they will go to any one who sends for them. It is very convenient, now, isn't it?"

"But I never heard of such a thing; at least not among real dentists. Who told you about them?"

"Told me? Why, they told me."

"Molly Hayes! Do you know them?"

"Yes, indeed. I was introduced to them at church last Wednesday night, and they have called twice. Aunt Eliza has ordered a set of teeth from them. I wonder they have not been here!"

"They need not trouble themselves," I replied, dryly.

Molly blushed crimson and changed the subject. Soon after, she went away.

Well, that was the beginning of it. The whole country went wild on the Chidester Brothers after that, and every one who came near me had something to say in their praise. The very fence rows seemed to whisper of new teeth. I was busy just then, for mother had been quite ill, and when she was able, father and Jim had taken her away for a trip. I was keeping house and ruling over the boys—doubtless with wisdom, and certainly with great wear and tear of body. We lived two miles out of Meadowside, a lovely old country town, and although the girls were very good in coming to see me and sending me notes, books and patterns by their brothers, little and big, I was not "in the swim" of the busy town life and fun, as usual. I had to rely on the gossip of callers.

Molly Hayes did not come after the first mention of the Chidester Brothers, but I heard, from her brother George and from the other girls, of her being often with those gentlemen and very much pleased with their attentions. To every one except George I freely expressed my opinion of such chance acquaintances.

"I don't like strangers, anyway; but when it comes to strangers you don't know—"

"Hello, Jennie! Got you there," cried Jack, the caviler. "They wouldn't be strangers if you knew them, would they?"

"And who are a sort of twin 'Cheap John' besides," I went on, superior to the interruption. "I can't understand any girl receiving their attentions, or even ranking them among her acquaintances."

"But, Jennie, they are so pleasant and so handsome, and really quite like gentlemen," mildly remonstrated Susie Brown, who was calling.

"Like! But I want the men I know to be gentlemen, and I don't believe a gentleman would think of peddling either teeth or toothbrushes. One is of no higher grade of business than is the other."

"I think you are right," observed Mr. Heming, Susie's escort, and the very quiet assistant of Mr. Brown, our druggist.

Mr. Heming had been a stranger a year before this, but he had come to Meadowside well recommended. Besides, he was so very plain it would never have paid him to be anything but 'eminently respectable."

"Of course I am right!" I cried. "Why, these men may be part of a gang of burglars, instead of gentlemen or men of honest and honorable calling. What if they should be some of the scamps who broke into Mr. Scott's house, over in Lebanon, and carried off his instruments and his new dentist's chair? I know they shouldn't come here as they go to so many houses, particularly with father and Jim away. I should never have a moment's peace."

"I should think you would feel timid as it is," remarked Susie, with a glance around the room. We were eating fruit in the dining-room, where the sideboard and buffet were crowded with silver and pretty things.

"Where do you keep all the '?" asked Mr. Heming. "You surely do not leave them exposed in this way during the night!"

"Oh, no, indeed. They are all carried up into mother's room. Mine is next to it. It is a terrible nuisance, and if they were mine I should just leave them here. The house is safe enough."

"You have burglar alarms, I suppose?"

"No, we have not. Father talks of getting them, but there it stands—at talking."

"Then you do not sleep alone?"

"Indeed I do. The boys are in the nursery and the servants in the attic. Dear me, I don't think I could stand it without a few hours to myself! Listen! That's the way it is from morning till night. Just excuse me while I settle them."

I ran upstairs, and when I came down, Susie and Mr. Heming were ready to leave, and waiting under the hall lamp.

"I believe this will be a match," I thought as I kissed Susie. "And really," carrying on the same thought as I went slowly up stairs again, "I don't see why it would not be a good thing. And he is not half such a fright as I thought him.

"There was quite a glow in his eyes tonight. Usually he is as dull as dishwater. Not much like those everlasting Chidester Brothers. Susie is certainly a quiet, pretty little thing."

As I set my candle on my dressing-table I saw reflected in the glass the scornful curl of my lip at the mere thought of those Cheap Johns, as I had named them.

No respectable dentist would do such a thing as this business of theirs. Where did they get the means to live as they did while they carried it on? Puzzling over it, I fell asleep and dreamed of — Mr. Heming and Susie mixing and rolling pills together, upon mother's best silver salver. Two weeks later a party of the young people came out to spend the last evening of my loneliness with me. Father and mother were coming home the next day, and I was heartily glad of it. Jim was in Boston finishing his trip with some college friends.

Among my guests of the evening were Susie Brown and Mr. Heming, Molly Hayes and one of the Chidester Brothers. I could hardly believe my eyes. But Molly was as unconcerned as possible, introduced him with that little air of hers which always says to me as plainly as words, "See what I have caught!' and rattled away all the evening, as usual. As for him, he behaved very well, and although I did not exchange words with him after the introduction, I must say I enjoyed looking at him on the sly. Nothing I had heard of his looks had done him justice.

They all staid late. Mr. Heming and Susie were the first to leave, and Molly and the Chidester, the last. After they had crossed the door-step I saw him pause and glance back at the hall and the stairway. It was a peculiar and searching glance, and gave me a chilly sensation of fear and dread. My suspicions were all renewed and strengthened; for I will confess the man's noble face and bearing had influenced me, even in the one interview.

Under the effect of that glance, however, I had all the silver gathered up most carefully, and packed in several baskets, and I concluded to sleep in mother's room instead of my own. Moreover, I opened the doors between the nursery and our rooms. I was not at all mindful of the delights of utter loneliness. I went back and forth several times to the tumbled beds in the nursery, envying the rosy sleepers, and it was late indeed, before I joined them.

Almost instantly it seemed to me, I was broad awake again, and looking straight before me at a terrible sight. There was a light in the room—a pale, uncertain, flickering light, which streamed upward from the floor at the foot of the bed, and cast strange shadows on the ceiling. The door into my room was shut, but the one into the hall was wide open, as well as the window beyond it, opening upon the porch roof. I felt the night wind blowing over me; I think that woke me, and not any noise or movement, for I lay perfectly still and calm until my shattered senses returned and I knew what to fear.

"Burglars!" beat my frightened heart. "The Chidester Brothers," came choking into my tightened throat. I had too much sense to move or scream. I lay as still as death, only drawing long, even breaths, as if sound in sleep, and using my eyes for all they were worth, The shadows on the ceiling showed that things were being taken up and down—our silver—by gigantic hands, but all other outlines were so confused that I could distinguish nothing.

How long the time, how deadly cold the chills of terror that swept over me, no one will ever know who has not passed through it all. Suddenly I heard a sound—a sound which filled me with sickening dread. The boys were awake—were moving—were calling me.

The burglar sprang to his feet, light and noiselessly as a breath, and stood poised and ready, his back toward me. He turned, his lamp flared up. In the glass opposite, above the mask which had doubtless slipped as he sprang up, I saw the face of the "eminently respectable" Mr. Heming!

Involuntarily I uttered a sharp cry. Then I closed my eyes and felt myself sinking away into helpless, hopeless terror. But the door of my room flew open with a bang. I heard Jack shout and Nutty scream, a rustle, a thud, a pistol shot, confused voices, trampling of feet, and tremendous pounding and kicking on the porch.

Just let any one try "this sort of thing," and see how quickly events follow each other, and how many different sounds they can hear at one time.

I sprang out of bed, and the chaos began to resolve itself into some kind of order. Jack and Nutty were both telling me that there was a carriage at the door; the burglar had gone through the window and evidently into the hands of his enemies, for above the confusion downstairs I could hear Jim—our brother Jim—roaring for the hall door to be opened. Some one was pounding on it lustily. I seized Nutty and Jack as soon as I had hurried into my wrapper, and trembling in every limb, we rushed down the long hall and stairs.

The hall lamp was burning as usual. I hastily unbolted, unbarred and unlocked the great front door, opened it with a jerk, and threw myself into the arms of—the Chidester Brothers.

"I thought it was Jim," I cried, starting away.

"Jennie! Thank God!" cried Jim, snatching me to him, as he rushed in. "Are you all safe? No one hurt at all?"

"No one. And nothing taken."

"Just in time!" exclaimed the Chidesters.

"Just in time!" echoed Jim. "Boys, I can never half thank you."

There were others trooping in and standing around me with startled and admiring faces. A dark and compact group wore uniforms and carried themselves with the easy manner of men to whom nothing was new or shocking. In their midst, hatless and pale, and oh, how ugly, mean and common, I saw Mr. Heming.

I know, now, there were not more than five or six men altogether, but that night they seemed to fill the hall.

"Jennie, you are shaking with a chill," cried Jim. You must go to bed at once. I'll take you up"—for I tightened my hold on him—"and call the servants for you. I expect they are too frightened to come out of their rooms. Just make yourselves comfortable, gentlemen; I'll be with you in five minutes."

He marched me to my room and called the nurse.

"Oh, Jim, one moment, please. Where did you come from? And who are the Chidesters?"

"First-rate fellows; my class, you know. They telegraphed me. But I can't stop, really. I'll be up again as soon as I can get away."

Then I covered my head among the pillows and had a good, hard and frightened cry, for I was frightened, now that it was all over. Nurse did her best for me by sending the boys to bed and keeping the doors closed. By the time Jim tapped for admittance I was quiet and ready to hear his story.

"Well, Jennie, we've made a big haul. That rascal is the master-spirit of the gang which has been at work around here for a year or two. He's an old hand at it, and his engagement with Mr. Brown was one of his clever dodges. He is a druggist, as he is half a dozen other things, but his letters were forged. The Chidesters saw him once in Boston when he was on a trial, and they knew him at once when they saw him here. They are wide awake, both of them. About a week ago they heard something—I haven't got at the bottom of it yet, but two men who came to Tomlinson's for the night had something to do with it—which put them on the track of to-night, and they wrote to me, but they had to make it a cautious letter, and asked me to hold myself in readiness for a telegram, but not to come without one. I was at their cousins'. They telegraphed last night and met me at the train at the next station. Syd says he was here last evening, for he was half afraid I might not get home, and he thought he had better look around a bit in case anything should come off to frighten you. By the way, how is it you never met before?"

"But why did he not tell me, or some one?" I asked, passing the question.

"Wanted to catch the scamp, of course, and there was no danger, really. They did everything in first-class style."

"Worthy the Chidester Brothers," I said, with a little sneer.

"Brothers? Why, they are cousins—double first, to be sure, and enough alike to be brothers. Rich as Jews, both of them, too."

"Then why are they dentists?" I asked.

"Dentists?"

Jim's tones brought me upright in bed.

"Yes, dentists. And traveling dentists at that."

I never heard any one laugh as Jim did I waited and waited for him to get through and tell me the joke, until I was fairly cross. At last he wiped his eyes, and with only an occasional chuckle, out it came.

They had laid a wager that they could leave Boston in their own carriage and drive for six months east, west, north and south, just as they chose, taking no money with them and sending for none, but living honestly by their wits. Not a soul in Boston believes they are keeping to the terms of the wager. They had not heard of them for a month when their letter came to me. What a pair they are! The idea of Syd Cyril! They have had larks! Wait until I see them tomorrow! But you had better get some sleep. I am glad mother missed this. Good night."

Of course, I thought of the Chidesters.

We did not see them the next day. They went off in answer to a telegram, leaving a note for Jim. The other Chidester Brothers, the real ones, their respective and respectable fathers, had found them out and issued an edict of recall. They entreated Jim to keep their secret "until the excitement passed off," and to make their apologies to me. "And pray, tell her she was quite right. I thoroughly respect her for her refusal to countenance the Chidester Brothers"—so the note ended.

"That was Cyril," said Jim. "He is rather the finest nature of the two. He would never have thought of such a trick. But Syd can start them. I would like to see Lucy's face when this came out at home. It is Lucy Thorne I mean. She is their cousin."

Lucy Thorne is now Mrs. Jim. And when the Chidesters came back, as they had to, to the trial of my burglar—Well, I might as well tell it in a word—I belong to one of them. Cyril Chidester found respect a very good foundation for a warmer feeling, so he asked me to overlook his folly and sink the remembrance of it in his fame as "a rising lawyer." I overlooked it, and I am "rising" with him.—Waverly.

COST OF ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS.

The total expense of the Peary and the Peary relief expeditions was within $25,000, or, aproximately, within one-tenth of the amount that was involved in the very much less successful British North Pole expedition of 1875–76, and barely more than one-fortieth of the expense of the Austro-Hungarian expedition under Payer and Weyprecht of 1873–74.

The contributions of knowledge obtained in either one of the departments of geography or ethnology alone can rationally be considered to repay the moderate outlay of these two expeditions, a cost considerably below that which in modern times is sometimes paid for a painting.

It is interesting to place here, by way of comparison, the cost of previous explorations. One of the earliest, that of Willoughby, conducted 300 years ago, required for its expenditure £6000; that of Moor, in 1746, £10,000; the second German North Pole expedition was covered by an appropriation of 120,000 thalers, or £11,000, while the Franklin expedition and the various ones sent out to ascertain his fate in 1854 cost £833,333, or over $4,000,000.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A McCloud river woodsman in the heart of Oregon cut down a big five-foot sugar pine recently which proved to be hollow for 45 feet. The McCloud Pioneer asks us to believe that in that hollow tree were five black, seven cinnamon and three grizzily bears, and that the woodsman, after nailing slabs over the open end of the log, sent it rolling down the mountain toward the town, where it arrived in safety with the animals all alive to be exhibited.

The funny man's son was fooling with a gun, and it attracted the attention of the father. "What's the matter with it?" inquired the f. m. "It won't work," said the boy, making another effort to shoot it. "Won't work?" queried the father seriously, "then why don't you discharge it?" and just at that moment it went off with a terrific boom.—Detroit Free Press.

Amen.

I cannot say
Beneath the pressure of life's cares to-day,
I joy in these;
But I can say
That I had rather walk this rugged way
If Him it please.

I cannot feel
That all is well when dark'ning clouds conceal
The shining sun;
But then, I know
God lives and loves; and say, since it is so,
Thy will be done.

I cannot speak
In happy tones; the tear-drops on my cheek
Show I am sad;
But I can speak
Of grace to suffer with submission meek,
Until made glad.

I do not see
Why God should e'en permit some things to be,
When He is love;
But I can see,
Though often dimly, through the mystery,
His hand above.

I do not look
Upon the present, nor in Nature's book,
To read my fate;
But I do look
For promised blessings in God's book,
And I can wait.

FIVE HOURS IN THE SNOW IN STOCKINGFEET.

A Child Runs Away From Home Wednesday Morning.

Mary McCarty, the 11-years-old niece of Cornelius Harrington, living on Pine street, disappeared about 6.30 Wednesday morning and was not found until about 11.30, when she was discovered in an out house of one of the tenements at the wire mill, where Harrington lived previous to moving to Pine street some time last spring. Strange to say the girl was not harmed by her experience, though when found she was pretty cold, and her feet, though blue and swollen, were not frost-bitten.

The family was up and about the house when Mary made her appearance, having apparently just got out of bed. She passed through the room where her uncle and aunt were and remarked "I'm going to run away." Nothing was thought of it and no attention was paid to the matter, but after a time it was noticed she was not about and inquiries of the rest of the family and a search showed that she was not in the house. Her brother, a couple of years older, found her footprints in the snow and followed them to the corner of Thorndike and Main streets, where he lost them because of the trodden condition of the snow, but thought they turned to the west. Search was made for her at all the houses in the neighborhood, and at every place where it was thought likely she might go, but no trace of her could be found. About 10.40 the duty call was rung on the fire bell and the firemen called out to search for her. About an inch of snow had fallen since she started out, filling any tracks she might have made unless they were in places where the snow had not been trodden. Following up the statement of the boy that when the tracks ceased they seemed to point westward search was made on West Main street, and her tracks were found again in the deep snow on the sidewalk beyond the Point of Rocks by L. E. Chandler, but were lost again when houses were reached where the sidewalk had been cleared of snow. The barns in the vicinity were thoroughly searched, and then Harrington, J. F. Holbrook and C. L. Alexander drove to the house at the wire mill formerly occupied by Harrington. As they drove up Mr. Alexander noticed tracks which looked as if made by bare feet, but partially filled with the light snow of the morning. The attention of the others was called to them, and on going into the building the girl was found. She was at once taken to her home on Pine street, and the found signal, one stroke, rung on the fire bell. She would not say a word on the way to the village until nearly home, and then in reply to the oft-repeated question if she was cold, said no.

It seems strange that she should have gone all the way, fully a mile, and been seen by no one; but at that time Wednesday morning it was quite dark, and probably many of the persons along the way were not up. She gives no reason for the act, except that she wanted to go home, and it is probable that she is not in her right mind.

No Epidemic of Scarlet Fever at the State Primary School.

Certain of the Boston and one of the Springfield dailies yesterday morning contained scare pieces to the effect that an epidemic of scarlet fever had broken out at the state primary school, and that children who had been exposed to the disease there had been sent to families in different localities. All of which was a "fake" pure and simple. The facts are that two weeks ago Wednesday two cases made their appearance, one in the family of Mr. Wheeler, the superintendent, the other being a girl in the school, though there had been no possible communication between these children. On the same day a child was received from the almshouse at Westfield and was placed in the usual quarantine, coming down the next day with the same disease. All the cases have been confined in the hospital for contagious diseases, which is situated quite a distance from the other buildings, and have been attended by two competent nurses, none of the patients being confined to the bed more than two days. Neither the boys nor the girls of the school have been exposed, and no new cases have appeared, nor any which are suspicious even, and the departments in which the first cases appeared have been thoroughly fumigated. Dr. Worcester, of the board of trustees, who visited the school Saturday, went over the ground thoroughly and said on leaving that everything possible which could be thought of to stop the spread of the disease had been done. Among the 300 or 400 children which are usually at the school, coming from all points of the compass and every class of people, it is not uncommon to have one or two cases of contagious diseases of some kind among them, and no thought of an epidemic. The whole story evidently started in Springfield where one of the older girls, who had been at the school only a few weeks and employed in the sewing room, away from the children, had been sent to work in a family. On being questioned as to the school and if there was any sickness there she stated that there were cases of scarlet fever. As there were children in the family where she was the matter was reported to the Springfield authorities, the reporters got hold of it and "spread" it without looking up the facts in the matter.

Frank Keefe, about 24, employed by H. C. Strong, narrowly escaped death Wednesday night through ignorance of the power of the medicine he was taking. The project of organizing a camera club is being talked of among the devotees of the art in this village. Lovers of oysters are compelled to pay an advanced price for that bivalve on account of the extreme cold weather of the past few weeks, the ice being so thick that it has been almost impossible to get them. The price has been increased to 50 cents a quart by the retailers, and last night another advance of ten cents a gallon was made by the wholesalers. The price per quart will not be advanced, however, unless another advance is made by the wholesalers, though unless the ice breaks up within a few days there will not be an oyster in the market. Fish have also advanced in price a little, and though it has been impossible to get some kinds, still enough have been procurable to supply the demand.

The idea of offering special premiums at the fair of the agricultural society next September seems to be a taking one with the merchants, and several of them have already expressed their intention of doing something in that line. One of the grocers is to offer a premium for the best loaf of bread made from a certain brand of flour which he controls, besides premiums for other things. Anyone is at liberty to offer any premium they choose for any thing, and the society will gladly make the announcement in its premium list, which will be issued about the 15th of February, and provide space for the exhibit in each line at the fair in September, where it will be properly labeled.

Palmer people have long appreciated Lawyer Gardner's good qualities, and for this reason urged his election to the office of district attorney. Now that Pittsfield people have had a chance to become better acquainted with him they are beginning to find them out for themselves. The following is from the Berkshire Evening Eagle of Monday, published at Pittsfield, where Mr. Gardner has been for the past two weeks attending to the duties of his office:—

District Attorney Gardner has passed through the first week of his official life most creditably, and has made a decidedly favorable impression on those who have watched his conduct of cases. His cross-examining and his argument in the Whipple case Friday showed him to be a shrewd lawyer and a sound reasoner. He is courteous and affable, and will be in every respect a worthy successor of the able men who have preceded him.

By the way, would it not be a good idea if the scholars in the grammar school buildings of the town were trained in the fire drill? In the high school there is little need of it, for with the exception of about ten minutes in the morning the majority of the scholars are in the recitation rooms on the lower floor and could easily get out if a fire should occur. But in the grammar schools a fire might prove a serious affair, with the panic sure to follow among the children and the natural rush for the stairs. If they were trained in such a drill and made to go through it unexpectedly once in a while, they would become so accustomed to it that if an occasion for its use should occur the building could be emptied in a very short time without harm to any of the occupants.

W. A. Barnes and Smith & Co. have in their places of business new computing scales which are quite a novelty, as well as a great convenience, as they will tell the exact value of any fraction of a pound of merchandise at any given price per pound without the clerk being obliged to guess at it or stop to figure it out. For instance, if a grocer cuts you off a pound and thirteen ounces of cheese and the price is 15 cents a pound, he sets the scale at 15 by one row of figures, and the figure at which the indicator stops on another row when the scale balances indicates exactly how much you owe for the cheese. Or if you want ten cents' worth of confectionery which costs 27 cents a pound, the scale is set on the 27 row and the balance shoved out to 10 on the other row, and neither you nor the dealer are cheated.

The price of pork and all pork products is higher this winter than for many years, averaging from four to eight cents above former schedules. Now the butchers pay 10 cents per pound for whole hogs, against 6 last winter, while hams which formerly could be had for 9 and 10 cents now cost 15 and 16. Lard which a year ago was plentiful at 7 cents, is now scarce at 12 and 13. Of course a corresponding increase must be made to the consumer. The reason is the scarcity of hogs in all parts of the country, and the farmer who has any for sale can realize a handsome profit on them at this time. The price of beef has also been advanced by the Chicago wholesale houses a couple of cents a pound, though the local butchers have not yet put up their prices, as has been done in many places, though if another advance, which is quite likely to come, is made they will be compelled to do so.

William Henry Harrison Ryder was before the district court Monday charged with too liberal use of the ardent on Saturday night. He is an old offender, having had a sample of the law in all the various forms of the past few years. He was the first person before the Palmer court when the law making the fine for drunkenness $1 with no costs went into effect, and when told that the assessment was $1 said "Is that all?" in a manner which showed that he expected to part with at least a dozen times that amount. The probation officer has received a proposition from a Boston house which is handling one of the many cures for drunkenness, offering to come to Palmer and treat two patients free of charge, and suggested that the experiment be tried on Ryder, and the matter was continued until the parties could be communicated with, Mr. Ryder expressing a willingness to be operated upon. The case of Patrick Owen for an assault was further continued to next Monday. Wednesday John Woods was placed on probation without date for drunkenness. Yesterday Michael Danihy was probated until March 4th for drunkenness.

Lull of Springfield; Grand Treasurer, Mrs. Nettie Dunham of Springfield; Grand Warden, Mrs. Etta Garfield of Springfield; Grand Guard, Miss Florence Wetmore of Westfield. The officers of the local lodge are: N. G., Miss May Robinson; V. G., Mrs. Clara Converse; R. S., Mrs. S. A. Parkhurst; F. S., Mrs. E. A. Caryl; treasurer, A. G. Newton; W., Mrs. Anna Moore; C., Mrs. Ella Washburn; O. G., R. A. McQuaid; I. G., Mrs. Sarah Bray; R. S. N. G., G. H. Bray; L. S. N. G., Mrs. R. A. McQuaid; R. S. V. G., Mrs. Rose Carter; L. S. V. G., Mrs. Carrie Reed; chaplain, Mrs. M. A. Shaw; organist, Mrs. Georgia Fuller.

Fortunate indeed was the farmer who could keep the water pipes in his barn from freezing during the recent cold spell. The system for watering the cattle which was put into the new barn has proved to be a good one. W. H. ## LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Jan. 25, 1893.

The movement against the assessment endowment orders continues, and it is evident that there will be several propositions before the committee on insurance, some of which will embody only a strong hostility to the orders and a determination to kill them off as soon as possible, while others will have a more or less covert attempt to save all possible power in the hands of the officers. Following closely on the heels of the Bennett bill to close up at once all home and foreign orders (including the Order of Tonti) is the bill of Senator Kimball of Hampshire to compel any such assessment company, upon the petition of three-fourths of its certificateholders, to stop levying assessments and paying benefits, and to distribute its assets within 30 days of the filing of the petition. It remains to be seen what showing these orders can make this year, but so many of them have gone to utter ruin since the last session, it is not likely they can do much.

Governor Russell has sent the Legislature a message, suggesting that June 17, Bunker Hill day, be celebrated at Chicago at the World's Fair as Massachusetts day.

The House heard on Friday three eloquent speeches in honor of the late ex-President Hayes. They were by Mr. Roe of Worcester, Mr. Moriarty of Worcester, and Mr. Parker of Boston. It looked as if there might be trouble because Mr. Quinn of Boston thought it was an insult to the South to use the words "rebellious states." But he changed his mind and everything was decorous and fitting in honor of the great president whose modesty prevented his being the brilliant figure some public men are.

The effect of the new rules has been not only to increase enormously the printing bills of the state, but to put a large amount of work upon the men who handle the printed matter and to double the work in the newspaper gallery. Thus far it does not appear that enough has been gained by the rule to pay for the trouble and expense. New business rushes in at a great rate, and the matters proposed are of more than average importance. It is too early to judge what the capacity of the Legislature is for work, but there will be much for it to do.

Just now the Democratic move for the abolition of the governor's council is in a ridiculous plight owing to the failure of any friends of the change to make an appearance at the hearing on the governor's message Tuesday forenoon. Some 30 people were present, but they all came to look on, not to speak. The Democratic members of the committee realized the unpleasantness of the situation, especially after the great demonstration which had been made only a few days before by Messrs. Quincy and Bradford for the abolition of the council, and by urgent protest they prevented the closing of the hearing at once. The door is left open by which another hearing may be had. Very likely there will be such hearing, and that the leading lights of the Democracy will give it their presence or support, for after Josiah Quincy has publicly declared that the total abolition of the council is one of the prime issues upon which the Democratic party differs from the Republican, and the chief one upon which they propose to make the next campaign, it would be ridiculously unfortunate if an appeal to the public should prove that there is complete popular indifference upon the proposed change.

Indications point to a serious effort on this Legislature to secure rapid transit in Boston. Just who is engineering the popular move under the surface does not appear, but petitions are coming in rapidly to the House and Senate, signed by leading business firms of Boston, representing that the needs of the city for more rapid inter-communication are very urgent, and asking for the adoption of the plan which is recommended in the report of the rapid transit commission to the last Legislature. Whatever is done, the West End Street Railway corporation must be taken into account. Its watchfulnes over the Legislature is close, and nothing will escape its notice. It has no plan of its own which it is pushing this year. Perhaps President Whitney's Cape Breton mining scheme is taking all his attention, while Henry D. Hyde is engrossed in the trial of Asa P. Potter of the Maverick Bank. But hired agents or counsel are looking after West End matters at the state house, leaving the capable Mr. Whitney to show how easy it is to run both coal mines and street railways.

The old scheme which was defeated last year, of having boards of police and license commissioners in cities, has been revived by Senator Milton of Middlesex. It has some features of the Boston police board plan, especially its infringement upon the right of local self-government. It provides that the salaries of the commissioners shall be fixed by the governor and council, but must be paid out of the city treasuries. The bill applies to every city in the state, except Boston, says that three commissioners in each city shall be appointed by the governor, with the approval of the council, from the two leading political parties, who shall act as a board of police, to have the management of the police force, to issue licenses for liquor-selling, public amusements, vehicles, and so on. Senator Milton is a very straight Republican.

A bill has been presented from prominent people of Concord asking for a law to prevent the pollution of all water supplies in the state. It is very straight and puts the matter in the hands of the state board of health, but excepts the Merrimac and Connecticut rivers and the Concord river within the limits of Lowell.

NEWS MATTERS IN GENERAL.

L. Q. C. Lamar, justice of the United States supreme court, died at Macon, Ga., Monday evening.

James G. Blaine, ex-secretary of state, who has been in failing health for some time, died at Washington at 11 o'clock this morning.

The station of the Connecticut River road at Chicopee was burned last Saturday, the fire being caused by the overturning of a stove in a freight car which jumped the rails and came to a standstill on the track close to the building.

Phillips Brooks, bishop of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts, died at his home in Boston Monday morning. He was a man of wonderful power, beloved throughout the country, and will be long and sincerely mourned.

The executive council has granted a reprieve until Feb. 23d to William Coy, the Pittsfield murderer. The petition of Holmes, the Chicopee murderer, for commutation of his sentence to imprisonment for life, is denied, as is also a reprieve in his case.

There was a horrible railroad accident near Alton, Ill., last Saturday morning, when an express train traveling at the rate of 40 miles an hour ran into an open switch and crashed into a train of oil cars, two of which were split open and caught fire, the flames spreading to the rest of the freight train. A gasoline tank exploded, drenching many of the spectators with the fluid and seriously burning them. About 25 lives were lost.

The regular meeting of Marcus Keep Woman's Relief Corps will be held in G. A. R. Hall this evening. The regular meeting of the post comes next Monday evening.

About 20 couples enjoyed a sleigh-ride last Friday evening and also surprised Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Rogers. Later in the evening dancing was enjoyed by those present.

Miss Letha Potter gave a whist party at her home last Saturday evening in honor of her friend, Miss Emma Gibson of Spencer. Miss Gibson returned to her home Wednesday.

Quite extensive alterations are talked of at the Methodist church, and it is probable that the near future will see many changes in regard to windows, frescoing and a church organ.

The Ware Dramatic Company will give a drama in Central Hall next Tuesday evening, representing "A Celebrated Case." The proceeds will go to the St. Vincent de Paul society of St. Patrick's church.

Rev. W. H. Marble gave an able discourse on the "Purpose of Life" to the students at the Academy and to many townspeople gathered there. After the service a prayer meeting was held in the chapel, which many attended.

There was a goodly number present at the entertainment and candy sale at the Congregational church last Friday evening. The reading by Mrs. Lynch of Los Angelos, Cal., was thoroughly enjoyable, and the nursery maids' drill was much of a novelty. About $35 was realized.

John F. Parker, aged 22, passed away at his home on Wednesday morning after three years' sickness. He has been a student at the Academy during the past two years, and was employed by James Pendergast, but was forced to resign his position on account of ill health. The funeral was held this morning at 9 o'clock from St. Patrick's church. Mr. Parker was highly respected by all who knew him.

Monson is getting her fair share of sensations these days. The daily papers the first of the week announced in startling phraseology the elopement of a wife and mother, but it turned out that she had simply gone to Palmer as domestic in a family there, and not deeming it necessary to inform her neighbors of everything she did they knew nothing of the matter, and seeing the track of the sleigh which came for her jumped at the conclusion that she had "gone with a handsomer man."

An impressive ceremony was that of confirmation at St. Patrick's Catholic church last Sunday when Bishop Beaven confirmed about 75 in the afternoon, after preaching in the morning. The girls were dressed in white, while the boys had a cross of white ribbon on their breast. The church was crowded, and the rites of confirmation were followed by a vesper service. The bishop was assisted by the Rev. Frs. McKeany of Bondsville, Joseph Marchand of Three Rivers, T. S. Donahue of Palmer, F. J. Lynch of Thorndike, John D. Coyle of Stafford Springs, J. F. Lee and W. F. Foley of Monson.

H. D. Vaille has accepted the position as foreman at A. N. Belding's stock farm at Rockville, Ct. Mr. Vaille has been a resident of the town for eight years, first coming to the town farm as warden, which position he filled for six years, raising the farm from a very low condition to its now prosperous one. For the past two years he has lived in the village, and has been engaged in W. N. Flynt & Sons' store the past year. During his stay in town Mr. Vaille has been prominently connected with the Grange. He leaves for his new position March 1st, and the good wishes of many friends in town will attend him. His daughter Lulu will remain in town, continuing her post graduate course at the Academy.

The post office and Keeney's drug store were burglarized last Friday night, and though the safe was blown open with powder the fact was not known until the next morning. The door of the store was pried open with tools stolen from Hutchinson's blacksmith shop, and it was then an easy matter to climb over the partition which separates the post office from it. A hole was drilled in the safe and the door blown open, but the burglars got only a quantity of postage due and newspaper stamps for their trouble and risk, and they are of no use outside post offices. The front windows of the store were blown out by the force of the explosion, but the sound was not heard by residents in that vicinity. In the drug store a few cigars were taken. The work was evidently that of professionals.

LUDLOW.

A horse belonging to the Ludlow Manufacturing Company backed into the canal near the upper mill yesterday and was drowned before it could be helped out.

BRIMFIELD.

The golden wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin B. Webber was celebrated at their home Tuesday by a large gathering of friends and relatives, including four generations of the family, coming from Boston, Worcester, Spencer, Pittsfield, Springfield and other places. In the evening the townspeople gathered to pay their respects to the couple. Among the reminders of the occasion were $50 in gold, a set of china and an easy chair.

BELCHERTOWN.

The town authorities have sent Spencer Hannum to the hospital at Boston, for treatment for cancer of the throat.

Mrs. Marion Bridgman Smith, widow of the late William P. Smith, died at the home of her daughter in Albany a few days ago, and the body was brought to Belchertown for burial. The deceased was a sister of E. R. Bridgman of this town and Malcolm Bridgman of Northampton.

The funeral of Mrs. Jane White, one of oldest residents of the town, widow of Moses White and sister of B. B. Snow and Mrs. Helen Cook, was attended from the Methodist church Sunday afternoon. She had been an invalid for a number of years, and not able to walk for a much longer time.

LUDLOW CENTER.

A Christian Endeavor fellowship prayer meeting was held Friday evening with the local Endeavor society.

The Wilbraham Grange has accepted the invitation of the local Grange to present its "Mock Trial" here next Monday evening, and it will be given probably at the town house.

Landlord Ferry, with quite a number of assistants, was busy last Saturday night attending to the temporal wants of a party of sleigh-riders from Stafford, Ct., between 25 and 30 couples partaking of the hospitality of the place, and probably enjoying a good time. If they did not, the fault must have been their own.

HAMPDEN.

Davis Pease, who has been spending the last two weeks with his daughter, Mrs. L. C. Parkess of Brattleboro, Vt., has returned home.

Mrs. Frances Ballard, widow of the late Squire Ballard and formerly of Brimfield, died very suddenly last Saturday at the house of her son, Dr. George T. Ballard. She had been in apparently good health, and while engaged in pleasant conversation at the dinner table suddenly raised her hand to her heart and expired instantly. Her age was 79.

Poultry raisers may take a little interest in William Johnson's account of what his hens have done this terribly cold weather, and though he has but medium accommodations and no fancy breeds, he would like to hear of any one doing better. November 1st, 1892, he had 23 pullets and three old hens. About the middle of the month the old hens "dropped out" and all of the pullets got to work, he receiving that month 360 eggs. The first week in December one pullet died, and from the remaining twenty-two he received 481 eggs. January 1st he added a flock of fifteen pullets and seven old hens; thirteen of the pullets were layers, and three of the old hens laid occasionally, and from all he received the first 21 days of this month 434 eggs.

WALES.

A large sleighing party from Stafford went through town Saturday evening on their way to Holland.

Warrren thinks his chugs are alive yet, as he and Fred Royce caught 60 fish Monday, the total weight being 30 pounds.

The insurance on the burned property has all been adjusted, and people are settling down to business. If the parties who carried off a new dining chair and rocker will return them no questions will be asked; otherwise a call will be made by an officer.

The latest dodge is to call up neighbors at midnight and ask for wine for sick grandmothers. That is what one young fellow did Tuesday night. As the householder peeped out of his window he saw a second fellow looking around the corner, so "smelled a mice." The fellow wanted a quart, but said a pint would do if a quart could not be spared, but he was refused and was told that some would be carried to the sick lady in the morning, whereupon he said there was no need to go to that trouble, as the doctor had said it must be had at once. This is not the first time persons have been called on in this way, whatever was obtained being taken to a card party in some back room.

25th Wedding Anniversary Surprise Party.

Mr. and Mrs. H. A. McFarland were surprised Saturday evening by a houseful of friends and neighbors who called to remind them that they had been married 25 years. The party was a large one, made up of representatives of nearly all the families in town, as well as some from Holland and Stafford. The visitors came laden with refreshments of all kinds, which were liberally distributed. Rev. Mr. Blackmer, pastor of the Methodist church, made some appropriate remarks, which were attentively listened to, after which Rev. H. P. Smith, pastor of the Baptist church, made a few remarks and read a poem written for the occasion, at the close of which he presented the couple with a large purse of silver with instructions to invest it in a silver tea service, to be appropriately inscribed, to all of which in a few words the groom made reply. On separating all agreed it had a very pleasant gathering.

A runaway accident befell a party of young people of this place while pleasure driving on Sunday evening. Luckily no one was hurt, though how they all escaped is a miracle, one wheel being completely smashed, and the horses running a considerable distance afterwards.

Considerable amusement was caused here on Tuesday noon by a few persons who were desirous of seeking admission into a closed office for the purpose of obtaining evidence relative to the absence of the owner. Fears of death were entertained, but proved to be without foundation. Physicians Puzzled.

Many persons are unable to sleep on their left side. The cause has long been a puzzle to physicians. Metropolitan papers speak with great interest of Dr. Franklin Miles, the eminent Indiana specialist in nervous and heart diseases, who has proven that this habit arises from a diseased heart. He has examined and kept on record thousands of cases. His New Heart Cure, a wonderful remedy, is sold at LeGro & Lynde's. Thousands testify to its value as a cure for Heart Diseases. Mrs. Chas. Benoy, Loveland, Colo., says its effects on her were marvelous. Elegant Book on heart disease free.

Recovers His Speech.

Alphonce Hemphling, of Summit township, Butler Co. Pa., made an affidavit that his twelve-year-old son, who had had St. Vitus Dance for twelve years, lost his speech, was completely cured after using three bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and also recovered his speech. Thousands testify to wonderful cures from using it for nervous diseases, dyspepsia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, headache, etc. Four doses of this Nervine cured Mrs. W. E. Burns, South Bend, Ind., who has been suffering with constant headache for three months. Trial bottle and elegant book at LeGro & Lynde's. (4)

If the hair is falling out and turning gray, the glands of the skin need stimulating and color food, and the best remedy and stimulant is Hall's Hair Renewer.

My Wife Said

To me last night: "How much do you suppose we have paid out for doctors and medicine in the past year?" I told her I did not know. To doctors I have paid nothing, and five dollars' worth of Sulphur Bitters has kept health in our family.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Found Dead.

Last evening a person giving the name of G. R. Thompson registered at Hunt's Hotel, and desired to be called in season to take the 12 p. m. train for Chicago. Being unable to awaken him, the room was entered by means of the ventilator over the door, when the gentleman was found to be dead. He was advertising agent for Sulphur Bitters, which has an extensive sale. The coroner returned a verdict of death from heart disease. His body will be sent East immediately.—Cin. Commercial.

SPRINGFIELD, January, 1893.

A whirl in jackets and newmarkets—women's and girls'—such a whirl as never happened in Springfield before.

You may have your pick of our entire stock—anything up to $15—for $5 and $8.50. Every garment hitherto $5 and less will be sold at $2.50.

No mistake now—

At $8.50—you may have your pick of anything in our stock that sold previous to this sale at $10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15—anything!

At $5—you may have your pick of anything in our stock that sold previous to this sale at $6, 6.50, 7, 7.50, 8 and 9—anything!

At $2.50—you may have your pick of anything in our stock that sold previous to this sale at $3, 3.50, 4, 4.50 and 5—possibly some 6 and 6.50 garments are among them.

Nothing will be reserved up to $15—nothing. Every garment is at your mercy in this sale. A finer lot of garments to be sold so you couldn't imagine—but we needn't say even that. You wouldn't think of buying without seeing, and seeing is an easy matter.

Everything on the 1st table $2.50 apiece.
Everything on the 2d table $5.00 apiece.
Everything on the 3d table $8.50 apiece.

Those who read and act quickly shall be the winners—they deserve to be. Early comers will get the $8 and 9 garments at 5, and the smartest buyers will get the $14 and 15 garments at 8.50. Don't be in a hurry for the 4, 5 and 6 garments at 2.50, for the rest will be cheap enough after the best are picked out.

WE WISH TO GO ON RECORD as having made the lowest prices ever quoted on Linens in the history of Western New England.

Friday, January 27th, we begin to sell Table Linens and Towels at prices that will cause many a good and conservative woman to hold up her hands in surprise.

The motive is to extend our Linen Trade to every town and hamlet in this region. Our linen business isn't half big enough. It is just as easy to handle twice as much. There's a way to get it: to handle it well. There's a way to get it with a jerk: to sell without profit. Frankly that's exactly what we shall do during this sale.

The samples given below are quite outside of the general market. We scarcely expect belief by those who do not come to see.

Fourteen Pounds in Two Weeks.

Happy Experience of a Railroad Man.

Mr. Peter Owens of Greenbush, N. Y., one of the oldest and best known engineers on the H. R. R. R., writes: "A few years ago I was taken sick. My trouble was general debility, pain in the back, blinding sick headache, and dyspepsia, caused by irregular habits of eating and the constant jar of the engine. I was losing flesh daily, and had no appetite; had consulted my physician, took his medicine, but continued to grow so much worse that I concluded my days of labor were about over. At this critical time I was advised to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which I did, and from the very first bottle I began to grow better, my appetite returned, and for the first two weeks I gained over a pound a day. I most heartily recommend it to all troubled as I was, for I know it is a medicine worthy of all confidence."

Hundreds of persons of sedentary habits are troubled with constipation and kidney disease, two of the most common ailments; they ought to be attended to, for they never of themselves get better. Mr. Geo. A. Wagner, Palatine Bridge, N. Y., and one of the Wagner Drawing Room Car Co's popular conductors, found it the only cure for constipation and kidney troubles; it also cured him of an obstinate case of catarrh of the bladder. Have you symptoms of dyspepsia, painful weight in the stomach after eating, headache, constipation, pain in the back? If so, do not delay in taking Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, as it may save you from some dreadful disease that might end in death.

Ripans Tabules prolong life.

The Poppy Land Limited Express.

The first train leaves at six P. M.
For the land where the poppy blows;
And mother dear is the engineer,
And the passenger laughs and crows.

The palace car is the mother's arms,
The whistle a low, sweet strain;
The passenger winks, and nods, and blinks,
And goes to sleep in the train!

At eight P. M. the next train starts
For the poppy land afar;
The summons clear falls on the ear,
"All aboard for the sleeping-car!"

But what is the fare to the poppy land?
I hope it is not too dear;
The fare is this, a hug and a kiss,
And it's paid to the engineer!

So I ask of Him who children took
On His knee in kindness great,
"Take charge, I pray, of the trains each day
That leave at six and eight."

"Keep watch of the passengers," thus I pray,
"For to me they are very dear;
And keep special ward, O gracious Lord,
O'er the gentle engineer."

A STRANGE EXPERIENCE.

She Came Out of it all Right, But the Danger was Great.

What Few Persons Would Like to Go Through in this World.

Seemed Almost Like a Miraculous Intervention of Providence.

One can scarcely credit it.

Yet it all happened, and in the little town of East North Yarmouth, Me.

And the lady lives to-day to tell the story. Her name is Mrs. H. E. Skillin, and she is well known and most highly esteemed.

It seems—but we will let her relate the matter in her own words, just as she gave them to our reporter.

"I began at first having trembling feelings of the heart," she said, "and was very bad at times. Any little excitement would make it worse. I became languid, and felt constantly tired and worn; lost all my natural energy and ambition, and was consequently weak and nervous.

"Indeed, I was so nervous at times that I could not bear to hear any one rock a chair. I had numbness in my right hand so it would seem apparently dead; and when it would come to its feeling there would be a deathly feeling at my stomach. I had a dull, tired feeling in my head.

"It was evident that there was a terrible diseased condition of my nerves and system which required immediate attention. I at once began taking Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and have taken four bottles.

MRS. H. E. SKILLIN.

"I now have a good appetite and have grown strong and recovered my old-time energy and ambition. I do not feel at all nervous. The dull feeling in my head is all gone, and I really feel as well as I have for a number of years.

"I consider these results remarkable in the comparatively short time I have been taking the remedy, and I cannot speak too highly of the good that it has done me.

"I hope others affected with nervous or chronic diseases will use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for after what it has done in my case, it will surely cure them."

It beats all what this wonderful remedy will do, and we do not wonder that so many people regard it as a life and health saver.

We know it to be perfectly harmless and purely vegetable. All druggists keep it for sale for $1, but it must not be classed with so-called patent medicines, for it is a physician's prescription, the discovery of the great nerve specialist who is so wonderfully successful in curing chronic or long-standing complaints, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass. The doctor can be consulted without charge by any and all who require medical advice and treatment, either by visiting his office or writing him about the complaint.

At any rate, use his wonderful medicine.

"I Vex Me Not."

I vex me not with brooding on the years
That were ere I drew breath: why should I thee:
Distrust the darkness that may fall again
When life is done? Perchance in other spheres—
Dead planets—I once tasted mortal tears,
And walked as now among a throng of men,
Pondering things that lay beyond my ken,
Questioning death, and solacing my fears.
Who knows? Oft times strange sense have I of this,
Vague memories that hold me with a spell,
Touches of unseen lips upon my brow,
Breathing some incommunicable bliss!
In years foregone, O Soul, was all not well?
Still lovlier life awaits thee. Fear not thou!

A WOMAN'S AMBITION.

Supper was just over at the Highland Cascade House. The elegantly attired ladies (at the Highland Cascade everybody "dressed" for real) had sauntered out on the cool piazza and shaded lawn. The band—an unpretentions association of two violinists, a flutist, and an overgrown boy who played the cornet—was tuning up in the big parlor; the lovers were already pairing off in the secluded corners, and one or two newly fledged flirtations were getting fairly under way. There was a soft murmur of well-bred voices on the air, mingling with the ceaseless murmur of the cascade and the distant chant of the whip-poor-wills on the edge of the wood, and as Sabrina Selton stood leaning against the particular dining-room window near which her own table stood, a sudden longing to escape from all this menial drudgery and be a lady like the rest of those soft-voiced, rainbow-clad beings on the lawn, took possession of her.

Sabrina was only eighteen—a tall, slight, soft-eyed girl, with all a true woman's yearning for the winsome things of life. But destiny up to this hour had dealt hardly with her. She was the only child of a gentle little widow who had sewed for vest-makers until her fingers had been warped out of all shape by rheumatism, and she was compelled to restrict her industry to the doing of the daily housewife. This was about the time of Sabrina's sixteenth birthday.

"Some one has got to earn our daily bread," said the brave, brown-eyed little girl, "and it must be me."

She had a sort of horror of that tedious, gleaming, unsatisfactory needle which had demanded so much time and returned so little profit in her mother's life. She had had but little opportunity to perfect herself in the higher studies of the district school; and so far as she could judge, she possessed no one special sword of talent whereby she might open the world's oyster.

"I must just go to work like other folks," pondered Sabrina, solemnly, and that very week she applied to the landlady of the Highland Cascade House for a place as dining-room girl.

"La, Sabriny, this beats all," said Mrs. Huggins. "Why, your pa was an army officer, and your ma's uncle was the Presbyterian clergyman at Grimmsdale."

"Yes, I know,' said Sabrina; "but all this doesn't put bread in our mouths or money in our pockets. We are very poor, Mrs. Huggins, and since mother's rheumatism has been so badly, we don't know which way to turn."

"Well, I'll give you two dollars a week and your board, Sabriny, and glad of the chance," said Mrs. Huggins. "The work ain't real heavy, but its so tedious and fussy. And Huggins, he says he wants real bright, pretty girls for waitresses—none of your lumpy creatures that take half an hour to understand an order, and another half hour to get it."

So for ten years Sabrina had spent her summers in the dining-room of the Highland Cascade House. In the winters she helped Miss Tittler, the village store-keeper, with her accounts, and took charge of sales during that lady's temporary absences from the counter. But she did not like it, and when Harry Vail, whose father owned the farm adjoining her mother's humble cottage, asked her to be his wife, she did not give him any immediate answer.

"Must I vegetate here all the days of my life?" she asked herself, rather discontentedly. "Harry is a nice fellow, and I suppose any other of the neighborhood girls would jump at the chance; but I don't think I could be contented here always."

Harry, however, was plainly anxious for her decision. He was crazy-mad in love with pretty Sabrina.

"Harry what a goose you are?" said Susey, his wise little old maid sister. "That girl will think herself a second Mrs. Langtry if you make such an abject slave of yourself. Where is your pride? Why do you allow yourself to be played fast and loose with in this sort of way? Look here! There's our cousin, Major Swift's daughter, at the Cascade House this week. Go there to see her. Promenade the piazzas with her. Let Sabrina Selton see that there are other girls in the world besides herself, and you'll stand some chance with her."

"Do you really mean it, Sue?"

"Yes, I do."

Harry nodded his head. "Then I'll try it," said he, "because I can't endure this suspense any longer; it's killing me."

And so it happened that, as Sabrina Selton stood there, after her table was cleared away and she had leisure to rest a moment and breathe in the fresh evening air, she saw Harry Vail walking up and down the long extent of the veranda, with a dashing young lady on his arm.

She oppened her brown eyes wide, like two moons of hazel light. Could that be the same Harry Vail that she was wont to see stride past her mother's door in the dewy cool of the summer mornings, with his rake on his shoulder, or perhaps carrying old Black's harness over his arm—the same Harry who rode on the mowing-machine, or drove high-heaped loads of hay at noontime under the shadow of the old barn-door? Never before this had she realized how handsome he was—how tall and straight, how lithely graceful in every moment! But who, she wondered, was the pretty girl in the maise-colored organdie dress and the yellow buttercups in her belt who smiled up at him as if he were her own especial property? Surely, Harry had no business to flirt like that!

Just then Mrs. Huggins bustled into the room.

"Sabriny! where be-ye, Sabriny?" said she. "There's some one askin' for ye. It's your uncle from Savannah!"

Sabrina gave a great start. Her uncle from Savannah—could this be possible? The uncle whom neither she nor her mother had ever seen—the sailor brother of her father, who had run away to sea when he was only fourteen, and of whom they had heard all sorts of vague rumors, some representing him a crossing-sweeper, and some as a nabob!

"Yes," said a calm voice in the doorway, "that is my brother Edgar's daughter. I need nothing beyond the evidence of my own senses to tell me that. So you are my niece, eh! Well, I have come for you. My wagon is at the door to carry you home. I want a good long talk with you."

He was a dark, grave man, with a gray mustache, somber eyes, and a bronzed complexion. Sabrina felt her heart warm at the very sound of her dead father. She felt as if she were in a dream as the light wagon whirled along the darkening roads, and she heard that he had come to take her and her mother to Savannah to share the luxurious home which he had provided for them in that southern clime.

There was no more poverty, no more griping work and penury for them. The gate into that brighter existence, for which Sabrina had so longed, was wide open at last.

But—Harry Vail!

After all, what did it matter? He was only a country farmer. His wife, whoever she might be, would have to toil and moil all her life. Sabrina had wished for ease and wealth. It was coming now. And Harry Vail belonged to her past life—the life that was to be left behind and forgotton as soon as possible. Let him enjoy the society of the brunette in the maize-colored gown now, as much as he pleased.

Uncle Vernon sat late, talking with his niece and her mother of the future which was waiting for them before he went back to the hotel.

"Sabrina! My dear little girl, why are you crying?"

In the dead of the night her mother's arms were around her, her mother's cheek against her own.

"I don't know, mother," sobbed the girl. "It all seems so strange. I am not certain whether I want to go to the south with Uncle Vernon or not. We have been poor all our lives—and yet, mother, we have been very happy. And we should have to leave behind us dear father's grave, and all our kind neighbors, and—and Harry."

And then came a fresh burst of tears.

Early in the rosy light of the morrow's dawn Sabrina stood beside the stone stile waiting for Harry Vail and his ox-team to pass. He looked at her in surprise as he came by.

"Good-morning, Sabrina," said he.

"Good morning, Harry," said she.

"You've got an early start this morning."

"Harry," she faltered.

"Yes?"

"You seemed to be having a nice time, last evening, with that girl in the yellow dress."

"I did have a nice time," he answered quietly.

Sabrina bit her lip, her eyes filled.

"I thought you cared for me, Harry."

He laid the ox-goad on the stone fence and came up and stood close beside her.

"Sabrina, I care for you only in all the world. But—"

"And I care for you, Harry—I love you!" cried Sabrina, sobbing on his shoulder.

"But I hate that girl in the yellow dress!"

"You need not do that, Sabrina," said he, with a smile. "She is my cousin and she is engaged to a man in New York, little darling, I was only trying to make you jealous, and it seems that I succeeded."

So Uncle Vernon went back to the South without his niece, for Sabrina elected to stay and be a farmer's wife, after all.

"It's strange, though," said Susey Vail, with a little joyous laugh, "that in spite of Sabrina's hopes and ambitions, she let the tide of opportunity go by, after all."

"Opportunity don't matter much when Love stands in the way," observed Uncle Vernon, dryly.

Mrs. Selton went to Savannah to keep house for her brother-in-law; but her summers—such, at least, is the bargain—are to be spent in the Vail farm-house, with her daughter.

"I think Sabrina will be quite happy as a farmer's wife," she said, "as long as Harry is the farmer."

"I never knew," said Sabrina, laughing, "how much I cared for Harry until I thought he was falling under the fascination of the girl in the yellow dress."

"That was my prescription, Harry, you know," said Susey, with a mischievous sparkle in her eyes. "Really, after this I think I may set up as a 'Wise Woman.'"

"Oh, what shall we have for dinner, Shall it be beef or lamb?"
"Neither; but let us dine to-day Off 'FERRIS' Delicious Ham."

DESPERATE EXPERIENCE

OF A BRATTLEBORO LADY—FOR YEARS SHE SUFFERED WITHOUT HOPE—A COMPLICATION THAT BAFFLES ALL THE PHYSICIANS CURED BY DR. ROYCE.

A cured and grateful patient is a physician's best friend. And one who has been rescued, as it were, from the very gates of death, is the best recommendation of the doctor's skill. The lady whose case we detail below is one of those who can attest the power of Dr. Royce and his vegetable treatment over the ravages of disease. Mrs. C. E. Hughes of Brattleboro was for a number of years a most abject sufferer from neuralgia of the ovaries and uterus, spinal disease and dyspepsia. She had also a serious heart trouble, which on several occasions had nearly cost her life. To-day Mrs. Hughes is perfectly well, and gives to Dr. Royce the credit of saving her life. It is impossible to convey a correct idea of the suffering which this lady underwent by mere words. Only those who have been similarly situated can comprehend her situation. The pain during the attack of neuralgia was simply excruciating and often threw the patient into spasms of the greatest severity. The dyspepsia also caused frequent attacks of spasmodic cramping of the limbs, and the heart difficulty, as we have already said, had nearly caused her death on several occasions. Her general health was of course entirely broken down, her appetite was almost entirely gone, and her stomach was in such condition that the simplest food caused the greatest distress. Mrs. Hughes became reduced to the shadow of her former self from lack of nourishment and loss of sleep, and at the time she came under Dr. Royce's treatment was in a thoroughly worn out and despondent condition. The patient had been under the care of a number of the best physicians she could find during her illness, but had not obtained relief from her sufferings. As a last resort, after years of misery, she came to Dr. Royce and placed her case in his hands. From the first she began to improve. The pain left her for the first time, the cramping ceased, her heart became regular in its work and her appetite returned. She gained rapidly in health and strength under the treatment and in three months was as well as ever in her life. Should any one ask if this cure was permanent, we will say that these events took place four years ago, and Mrs. Hughes is still in the best of health. The lady may be referred to at the above address. Dr. Royce treats all complaints with like success, and invites all the suffering to come and see him. Consultation, examination and advice free. All cases treated for $5 a month and medicines furnished. Located at 305½ Main street, Springfield, Mass. Office hours 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Patients at a distance treated successfully by mail. 44

"MEND YOUR WAYS"

Has been the advice of many a father to his wayward son, and good advice it was, too.

Mending one's ways is often times the making of a good man out of a shiftless boy,—an operation often requiring great skill on the part of the father.

Mending does a great good to whatever it is applied, providing, of course, it is properly applied, and at the proper time.

Mending one's clothing, for instance, when properly done, adds a great deal to its looks and wearing qualities.

We do mending properly and at a nominal charge. Bring in your torn or frayed garment and test our ability, or better still, drop us a postal, and we will call for it and return it when mended.

A Mood.

All the world is wrapped in shadow,
All my thought is steeped in gray;
Sweet and wanton sadness holds me,
And enfolds me,
As the arms of night the day,
Sweet as pulsing of spent music
When the hands have ceased to play.

O'er the sense a longing stealeth,
For what cause it may not know;
As when evening groweth tender,
And the splendor
Of the sunset burneth low,
O'er the land the white mist silent
Stealeth though the afterglow.

Sad as slanting sunlight falling
On the sails of outbound ships;
Dear as memory that hovers
Of a lover's
Kisses on a woman's lips;
Soft as when a thin cloud-mantle
Folds the moon in white eclipse.

So the sense is steeped in longing,
As the world is wrapped in gray;
'Tis so much akin to sorrow
As the morrow
Holdeth thought of yesterday.
'Tis, perchance, the soul immortal
Sad because the heart is clay.

—Charles Washington Coleman, in Harper's Bazar.

GRIFFIN, THE USURER.

There was one thing that old Griffin, the usurer, loved better than money—one thing, and one only—his daughter. She was not beautiful, either in form or features. Through neglect in childhood she had contracted a disease of the spine which left a sad curvature. This obstructed free nervous action, and so the whole physical life became dwarfed. Her face was weasoned, and her form diminutive. She stooped forward, bending to the right; and one shoulder stood above the other. Of course her movements were ungraceful.

For all this, everybody who knew Katy Griffin loved her. The sweetness of her temper, the kindness of her heart, the good will shown in benefits where it was fitting to bestow them—all these gave the impression of a soul that lived nearer to heaven than earth.

One day the angels lifted this beautiful soul out of its deformed earthly body, and bore it, clothed in an immortal body of spiritual substance like their own, upwards into heaven. There had been only slight warning of the change. Katy had drooped a little, but without complaining. Then she went to sleep, like a tired child, and the heart of the hard old man, her father—hard to the world, but soft to his child—was stricken with a sorrow beyond the power of healing.

The long-cherished greed of money, which had grown into second nature, was not diminished by this event. Pain seemed to stimulate instead of weaken the passion. Griffin exacted from the weak and necessitious, who came to him in their extremity, the largest discounts to which they would submit; often taking from poor men, forced by present needs to sell the notes on hand received in payment for work, at the rate of thirty, forty, or fifty per cent per annum. All day long he sat in his office, like a great spider, waiting for the flies that were sure to be entangled in his web; then he went back to his home, from which the light had gone out, and sat there in darkness and grief.

With the money taken by the old usurer from needy merchants, manufacturers and mechanics, he built a splendid monument over the grave of his child. Within the massive iron railing that enclosed this monument, seats were placed; and sitting in one of these, late in the afternoon, after the day's business was over, you would find old Mr. Griffin, when the air was warm and the sky clear. Choicest flowers bloomed around her monument.

"She loved flowers." This was his answer to a stranger who, seeing him in the little enclosure one day, entered and stood by his side, saying as the old man looked up:

"These flowers are very beautiful."

"She loved flowers."

"Your daughter?" responded the stranger."

"Yes. She was never without them."

"You loved her very much?" said the stranger.

"Loved her!" said the old man. "Love seems too common a term to express my feelings. Our language wants a new term."

"Everybody loved her," returned the stranger.

"Did you know her?" Mr. Griffin looked up at his companion curiously.

"I know those who both knew and loved her. A few times she has come in my way, and I felt her sphere like that of some blessed one."

"Oh, sir, she was an angel on the earth!" The old man spoke with a tremor of enthusiasm.

"And is now an angel in heaven.

"I believe it, sir. O, yes—I believe that. If she is not with the angels, and herself an angel, who shall hope to enter the Kingdom of Heaven?"

"Which is the kingdom of love and use," said the stranger.

"I don't know," replied Griffin, a dull shadow falling on his face—"I'm no theologian, and don't pretend to understand their phraseology. The talk of you pious people is generally Greek to me."

"Did Katy love herself?" asked the stranger.

"She was the most unselfish being I ever knew," promptly answered the father, with a flush of pride in his face.

"Always doing good, as she had opportunity."

"Yes, always."

"Do you think she comes to you often, now that she has laid off her earthly vesture?"

"I am sure of it," was answered. "Though my bodily eyes may be too dull to see her, yet love tells me she is near."

"And she looks into your heart—knows what you feel and think—sees, by her most interior vision, away down into the secret places of your life."

Old Griffin's countenance changed. It became more thoughtful, and just a little troubled.

"In coming near to you now, she sees past all outward things. No feeling, no purpose, no quality of the mind is hidden," continued the stranger. "Have you thought of this?"

The old man's head dropped upon his breast. His eyes rested on the ground. He made no answer.

"Let me relate to you a little incident," said the stranger. The old usurer raised his head. "A poor, honest, hard working mechanic had a sick child, whom he loved very much. Your child was no dearer to you than his child was to him. This poor mechanic had other children, and it taxed all his efforts, and took all his earnings to buy them plain food and clothing. The sick child needed many things not in the father's power to give. She needed to be taken out into the pure air—to have change, and cordials, and luxuries his slender purse might not afford.

"I met your angel-minded daughter in the chamber of this sick child one day. She had brought some delicacies to tempt her appetite, and a bunch of flowers to refresh her senses. 'On Saturday,' said the child, warmth coming into her wan face, 'father is going with me to the seashore. The doctor says it will do me so much good. Father will take me down, and leave me there for a week. I shall be so happy! I never saw the sea. How grand it must look.'

"My heart went with the child in her journey to the seashore. I knew that both body and mind would receive a healthy influence. I wish you could have seen the pleasure that shone in your Katy's face as she saw the joy of this poor sick child. 'I'm so glad you are going,' she said, taking her little hand. 'When you come back I will see you, and you must tell me all about the grand old ocean.'

"Well, sir, Saturday came, but the sick child did not see the ocean, nor get health from its cool and stimulating breezes. Why? Let me tell you. Her father, as I have said, was a poor man, who toiled hard for his money. It so happened that he was doing work for a person who promised him pay as soon as the job was completed. He had to buy material with which to do the work, and for which was to settle on receiving payment. The work amounted to a little over seventy dollars, and the cost of the material was thirty-five. When the job was done, instead of receiving cash, as he had expected, the poor mechanic could only get a note of hand payable in four months. This would not have been a serious inconvenience, or loss, if the money could have been obtained thereon at legal interest; but there was no person known to the mechanic who would discount the note at any fair rate. The promise to the sick child was made in expectation of receiving this money when the work was done.

"Well, sir! This poor mechanic brought this note of hand to you. It was for seventy dollars, bear in mind. Common interest for the four months it had to run would be about one dollar and a half, counting in the grace days; but you cut off twenty dollars. 'I'll give fifty or nothing,' you said to the poor man. 'The maker hardly ever pays his notes. Ten chances to one but I lose by it in the end. In fact, I'd rather not have this paper.' And yet you were buying the same man's paper every day, and considered it safe.

"Only fifteen dollars of profit was left to the poor man for two weeks of hard work. You took the rest! Of course, the sick, failing, longing child did not go to the sea breezes. No—no. And she died a month later. I saw Kitty standing with tear-filled eyes, looking upon the pale corpse. She had brought flowers to lay in the coffin. Of course she knew nothing of your part in the tragedy. The grieving father would not wound her tender heart by even a hint at the miserable truth.

"But things are different now," continued the stranger. "Katy's inner eyes are opened. She does not come to you in the outside world of veils and shadowing curtains of flesh; but as soul comes to soul—spirit to spirit. If there is subterfuge in your mind she sees it. If hard, grasping selfishness, that would take from a sick and dying child the very breath of life and coin it into gold—she sees that also. Can she love these? Nay, can she love him who admits and cherishes them? Ah, sir! If you would have this heavenly-minded child near you, you must love what she loves. If you would go to her when you die, you must set your heart on higher and purer things than treasure that moth corrupts."

The old man was stunned. He sat with eyes cast down, still and statue-like. When he lifted his eyes, the stranger was not near. He had departed with noiseless steps.

Next day a poor man came to the usurer. He had a note of sixty dollars.

"How much shall I take?" said the usurer to himself, as he looked greedily at the signature. It was on his lip to offer the poor man forty-five dollars for the note. But a thought of Katy kept the sentence back. She seemed to be standing close beside him, observing all that he was thinking and doing.

"This is for work," he said to the man, speaking, as he felt, to two auditors—one visible and the other invisible.

"Yes, sir. It is for work."

"All for labor?"

"No, sir. At least half for material."

"Was there a good profit in the work?"

"No, sir. It hardly paid for day labor."

"Ah! Is that so?" The usurer sat in a thoughtful way, holding the little piece of paper in his hand. More palpably present seemed Katy. "Is that so?" he repeated. "Then the case is slightly altered. You can't afford much discount."

"Every dollar taken from that note," said the poor man, "is so much lost from my hard earnings; so much bread taken from my children."

A brief struggle took place in the usurer's mind; then he filled out a check for fifty-eight dollars and sixty-three cents.

"I've charged only common interest," he said, as he gave the check.

"It's very kind in you, sir, very kind!" answered the poor man with feeling. "They said you'd take the hide off; but I knew it wasn't in the heart of one so full of riches as you are to rob a poor man's children. I'll put such slander back into the teeth of any one who utters it again in my presence. And the man went out.

"Was that right, Katy?" Almost aloud the old man said this, as if Katy were in bodily presence beside him. He felt the warmth of her approaching smile—the sweetness of a new emotion, born of an act which had in it the germ of a higher and nobler life. Never before had he denied the lust of gain; never before conceded, except to his child, anything for another's good.

In all that day's business there was conflict. Greed of gold prompted to the usual exactions; but the ever-recurring thought of Katy, with the impression of her nearness, held him from extortion when the weak and needy came to him. On large commercial paper there were current "street rates" of discount, which, though usurious, he made without scruple. But when the artisan and small manufacturer came, with their sober faces and small notes, the conscious presence of Katy restrained him. He dared not rob them as of old, lest the pure spirit he so loved should see it and depart from him.

And in the days that followed he could not go back to the old hard ways of grinding the needy whenever they were forced, through necessity, to seek his aid. Always the hand of Katy seemed on his hand, holding it back from cruel greed; always she seemed close by his side, observing his acts and looking down into his heart. In time, new thoughts stirred, and new questions arose in his mind. Glimpses of things higher than the mere sensual and corporeal were given to his unsealing eyes. He began to have a dim perception of the truth, that gold was not a satisfying element. That the more he gained the more he coveted.

One day, when the old passion for gain was strong upon him, he lost his usual sense of Katy's presence, and robbed a poor man, in pressing necessity, of twenty-five dollars—that being the excess of discount over what was legal on a note of one hundred and twenty-eight dollars. Scarcely had the man, with a sad, discouraged face, gone out from his office, when he became distinctly conscious that Katy was by his side. She had seen it all! This was the thought that flashed into his mind. Very still he sat, oppressed with a feeling of guilt and shame. He had done this selfish thing. Had taken the poor man's hard-earned profits, and added them to his bursting coffers; and Angel Katy had seen it all!

Pain and repentance were in his heart. Not so much for the act as for the dreaded consequences. Would not Kitty go away from him in sorrow; because he was base, sordid and cruel?

"I will end all this?" he said, in a passion of fear, lest he should lose his child. "Dear Katy! do not leave me—do not go away. It was all wrong—all wrong. I didn't reflect. It was the old bad way; but I will not go in it any more."

So he talked, almost crying, in a weak, quivering, half-childish manner wringing his hands.

"I will send him the twenty-five dollars. He shall have it all back again," he went on talking aloud. And he opened his check book, filled up a check for the sum mentioned, and enclosing it in an envelope, wrote upon it the man's address.

"Here," he said, with a deep sigh of relief. "I've made restitution." And the old man felt easier in mind after that. Katy, as it seemed to him, drew closer. He almost felt her breath on his cheek—her light arms twining about his neck.

"Lay up treasure in heaven." Was that her voice? How palpably it struck on the sense of hearing, as if it had come by an outer instead of an inner way. The old man started, half turning. What a flood of new and better thoughts came rushing into his mind.

"Gold perishes in the using; but good abides forever. Every good deed is a coin laid up in the treasury of heaven."

Somewhere he had heard of these sentences, and they had fixed themselves in memory. Now the dust of years was swept off by some angel-hand, and he saw them as distinctly as if they were but just recorded.

So the work was going on in old Griffin's mind. Slowly—with small promise at the beginning—under many hindrances and obstructions. But, after a while a small channel for a new life-current was cut into the hard rock of nature and habit, and a healthy stream began to flow therein with a perceptible current. At last the usurer gave up his calling. He said, "I have enough." Then there was a pause. His life seemed to stand still. There was an aching void in his heart. But, in a small silver thread, the new current flowed on, and there was a gradual deepening and widening of its channel.

Then his gold began to be a burden. He must use it in some way. He felt this impulse growing stronger and stronger. Katy's presence was still a palpable thing. He never lost the thought of her. What will she think? How will it appear in her eyes? Will she love me better for this? So, ever to the lost but present one, he kept turning and turning; and his thought of her gradually led him after ceasing in what was wrong, to the doing of good deeds.

Twenty years after Katy's death the old man died. Many wet eyes saw him coffined; and many voices, burdened with feeling, were lifted in blessings on his name. The spirit of his departed child had led his feet heavenward, and we may have faith that, standing on the threshold of the city of God, the pearly gate opened, and he passed in to dwell in safety forever.

POSTED ON BUSINESS METHODS.

The old gentleman had been trying to instil into his son some idea of business thrift, and to keep the lessons along had brought home a toy bank.

"Now, Tommy," he said, "I'll be president of this bank, and you'll be cashier. Your mother and sisters will be stockholders. Christmas we'll open it and declare a dividend. We'll put something in it every day."

The old gentleman put in a dime, Tommy and his sisters a nickel each, and his mother a dime.

"We'll let what I put in represent the interest on the other deposits," went on the old gentleman. "You keep track of what the others put in, and when we open the bank the interest will be divided proportionately among the depositors."

Tommy said he thought he understood, and put down in a book what each one had deposited.

For a couple of weeks all went smoothly. Every morning after breakfast each member of the family was called upon for something to deposit in the bank. But one evening the old gentleman had to go down town and discovered he had no street car fare—nothing less than a $10 bill—and he recalled the change in the bank. He abstracted a dime and went his way.

The next morning when deposits were called for Tommy announced that the bank was busted and had closed its doors.

"Why, Tommy, what do you mean?" asked the old gentleman.

"The president's been monkeying with the finances," said Tommy, "and there's a shortage."

"But that was only a temporary loan," explained the old gentleman, coloring up a little.

"Oh, yes; that's what they always say," said Tommy. "That's the usual custom."

"But it will be repaid at once."

"No use," said Tommy, shortly.

"Why not?"

"Huh! I guess you don't know anything about banks," exclaimed Tommy. "When the president gets to monkeying with the funds, the cashier guts the bank while he has the chance, 'cause he knows he won't have it long. Only a fool cashier is going to let the president get ahead of him."

"Tommy," said the old gentleman severely, as he looked in the direction of the woodshed, "do you know what happens to the cashier if he is caught?"

"Yep," returned Tommy, promptly. "He generally compromises so as to put the bank on its feet again. I'm willing to pay all the depositors in full without interest. Seeing as the president put up the interest in this case, I guess he ought to lose it, 'specially as I've only got fifteen cents of it left."

It was compromised on that basis, and the old gentleman has reached the conclusion that Tommy is destined to be a Wall street broker.

WHAT LIFE COSTS.—A methodical man died in Berlin a few days ago aged seventy-two. At the age of eighteen he began keeping a record, which he continued for fifty-two years, and then closed with the words, Omnia tentavi, multa persptxi, nihil perfeci.

This book showed that in fifty-two years he had smoked 628,715 cigars, of which he had received 43,692 as presents, while for the remaining 585,021 he had paid $10,435.

During the same period he had had eighty-five pairs of trousers made, seventy-four coats and waist-coats, and sixty-two pairs of boots. He had worn out 208 shirts and "fronts," and 326 collars. In car fares he spent not far from $428. In fifteen years, according to his bookkeeping, he had drunk 28,726 glasses of Bavarian beer, of which, however, 21,262 were only small ones.

For this beer and 36,081 glasses of cognac and spirits he spent $5350. He gave tips amounting to $1305.—San Francisco Argonaut.

THE MACHINERY OF MAN.—A man has with him a working pump called his heart, a working bellows called his lungs, a working vat called his stomach, a working condenser called his brain, and a working evaporator called his skin, all of which must be at work whether he will or not. The heart is expending over his body day by day 122 tons of work. He will go on lifting so many millions of tons in so many years. If he meet with no accident, the time will come when his last stroke will be finished and he will die.—Chicago Herald.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

LOVE MUST BE WON.

Love is not free to take like sun and air;
Nor given away for naught to any one.
It is no common right for men to share—
Like all things precious, it is sought and won.

So if another is more loved than you Say not, "It is unjust," but say, "If she Has earned more love than I it is her due.
"When I deserve more it will come to me."

But if your longing be for love indeed,
I'll teach you how to win it—a sure way:
Love and be lovely, that is all you need,
And what you wish for will be yours some day.

—Susan Coolidge.

WRINKLES.

Jack Frost is holding high carnival, and none of his antics are more vicious than the marks he leaves on the faces of fair women—and of those not so fair. The almanac maker might well italicise a sentence along down the January page. About—this—time—look—out—for—wrinkles. Artificial heat and cold winds are both trying to the skin, and changes from one to the other are especially productive of wrinkles. The involuntary contortions of facial muscles in a strong wind or in bright sunshine, repeated again and again, soon fix lines that deepen into permanent wrinkles.

Horizontal lines across the forehead are said to indicate strong reasoning powers, and vertical lines between the eyebrows, thoughtfulness. We like to think this is true. I have also noticed that persons in whom the scalp muscles were strongly developed—not, however, to such an extent as in the ear-moving quadrapeds—raise the eyebrows frequently, and women having this peculiarity always wrinkle the forehead while combing and arranging the hair. And not only thoughtful persons but persons with weak eyes, persons with ill tempers, and persons who fuss and worry, have the vertical lines.

Doctors, male and female, seem to care quite as much for their good looks as other people, yet if you ask a doctor the causes, the preventives and the cures of wrinkles, he will laugh at you, either openly or in his sleeve. So advice of this kind is left to quacks and newspaper men, and it is as safe to follow the one as the other. "First and most important," they both will tell you, "is good health," and straightway they propound rules to impair the health.

There is no time in a busy life to indulge

Three Months for 25 Cents.

To any one who is not now a subscriber to this paper, it will be sent three months on trial on receipt of 25 cents.

THE vacancy in the supreme court caused by the death of Justice L. Q. C. Lamar has been filled by the president's nominating Howell Edmunds Jackson of Tennessee yesterday.

THE executive council again rejected the name of Irving B. Sayles of Millbury for savings bank commissioner yesterday, and that matter is now probably ended, Gov. Russell having presented the name of Samuel O. Lamb of Greenfield.

AN important action in railroad circles, if the reports are true, is the one that the Reading combination, composed of the Reading, Boston and Maine and New England roads, had secured the Old Colony system, done to prevent the New York, New Haven and Hartford from securing a Boston connection.

THAT the state is vastly better off without the endowment orders than with them is shown by the increase in savings banks deposits since the orders commenced to collapse. Last year the deposits were $23,493,476 greater than in 1891, the greatest increase since 1871. The total amount deposited during the year was $82,535,534.

FEW months in the history of any country have seen or probably ever will see more deaths of distinguished persons than the month of January in this year. Jan. 11th, General Benjamin F. Butler; 16th, Fannie Kemble; 17th, ex-President Hayes; 23d, Bishop Phillips Brooks and Justice Lamar; 28th, General Doubleday; 27th, ex-Secretary Blaine and ex-Postmaster General James Campbell.

IN spite of the conference of railroad employes' associations some time ago, at which it was given out that there would be no labor troubles during the World's Fair on account of the prejudice which would naturally revert against the organizations, it would be strange if the men let slip such a seemingly good opportunity to enforce their demands, and now come rumors of a gigantic strike among the switchmen on all the roads entering Chicago, to be inaugurated within a fortnight, the men all being pledged to go into it and hold out to the end.

INTELLIGENCE was received a few days ago of a revolution in Hawaii, Queen Liliuokalani being deposed because of an attempt to force a new constitution upon the country which would disfranchise foreign residents and greatly enlarge her powers. A provisional government was organized, and commissioners are now here to ask the United States to annex the island to this country. Uncle Sam has never been in the annexation business to any extent, but it may be necessary in this case for us to take the proffered gift in order to keep it out of the hands of England, who is looking with covetous eyes in that direction.

DUNLAP, the pardoned Northampton bank robber, was preparing to go on the stage in a play which was to represent the bank robbery. Mrs. Rowland, who has worked so earnestly for Dunlap's pardon, in reply to a letter from Executive Clerk Edward F. Hamlin inquiring as to the truth of the report, wrote a spicy answer in which she stated that Dunlap was under no obligations to the state of Massachusetts, and would do as he pleased about it. Governor Russell took hold of the matter, however, and Dunlap has come to the conclusion that his debt to the state is not yet canceled, and will not act, at least in that piece.

AT Springfield this forenoon Wallace W. Holmes paid with his life the penalty for having killed his wife September 1, 1891, near Chicopee. Holmes killed her by a kick while drunk, and then buried the body in a hole under the house. Attempts were made to have the sentence changed to imprisonment for life on the ground that he was suffering from an incurable disease and could live but a short time anyway, by petitioning for a new trial on the ground that new evidence had been found, and by endeavoring to have a commission appointed to examine the condition of his mind, but all were denied, as was also a reprieve, and he hanged in the jail between 10 and 11 this forenoon. The last execution was that of Joseph B. Loomis in 1885.

THE death of James G. Blaine, which was briefly announced in our last issue, terminates the career of the foremost man in American political life. No man living to-day has a tithe of the devoted and enthusiastic personal following which for many years Mr. Blaine had commanded. He began his public life in the Maine Legislature, and in 1862 was elected to Congress, being returned for seven successive terms. He was chosen speaker of the House in 1869, and again in the two succeeding Congresses. He was an admirable presiding officer, as he had been an able worker and debater on the floor, to which he returned when the Democrats came into power in the House in 1875. The next year he was a prominent candidate for the presidential nomination, though there was much opposition to him, and Gov. Hayes carried off the prize. Soon after this Blaine was transferred to the Senate, where he remained until he entered President Garfield's cabinet in 1881 as secretary of state, his aspirations for the presidency having been again defeated. In the retirement from office which followed the tragical death of Garfield Mr. Blaine wrote his book, "Twenty Years of Congress," which has had an enormous sale. The campaign of 1884 brought him the coveted nomination for the presidency, but did not carry him into the White House. It was a campaign of mud-throwing and slander, and the old charges of his being implicated in the Credit Mobilier scandal were revived and enlarged upon with interest by his enemies. He could have had the nomination again in 1888, but was in Europe for his health and declined to be a candidate. He took the stump for Mr. Harrison, and became the latter's secretary of state. His shilly-shallying course in regard to the nomination last year is still fresh in mind. His announcement early in the year that "my name will not be presented to the national convention" was not accepted as a final declination, and his sudden resignation as secretary of state on the eve of convention clearly revealed his treachery to the president, and caused a revulsion of feeling even among his ardent supporters. It is charitable to assume that his disease was responsible for his singular course. He died full of honors, though having failed of the highest political honor, to which he so much aspired, and for this many thoughtful men in his own party have felt thankful, believing that he lacked some of the finer moral qualities, while fully recognizing h's brilliant abilities.

POSSIBLY A MURDER.

A Woman Brutally Pounded by a Worthless Husband.

One of the most dastardly crimes that has been committed in this town for many years was perpetrated at Three Rivers Tuesday evening by a man named Peter Phillips. It seems that he has not agreed with his family for some time past, being a shiftless fellow, and his wife, being obliged to work in the mill in order to procure a living for herself and children, refused to live with him. This greatly exasperated him, and he has vowed for a long time to make her suffer. About 6.30 o'clock Tuesday evening he met Mrs. Phillips going across the river on the ice to a friend's house to get her children, as she was obliged to leave them in charge of some person while she was at work in the mill. He accosted her by saying that he wanted to come back and live with her, but she denied him this privilege. He instantly laid hold of her and commenced to strangle her. She threw her arms around his neck and piteously begged of him not to kill her, but his response was only to throw her on the ice and drag her along by her hair. Her screams attracted the attention of her younger brother, who shouted to Albert Lamarine that Phillips was maltreating his wife. Lamarine tried to rescue the woman, but Phillips told him in a very menacing way not to interfere, and as Phillips has a reputation as an ugly customer Lamarine dared not venture within his reach. By this time they had struggled to the bank of the river, where a picket fence is built along the line of the New London Northern railroad track. The wretch quickly tore a picket off the fence and commenced to batter Mrs. Phillips about the head and face, but by an almost superhuman effort she succeeded in escaping from him and ran into a neighbor's house. The woman's injuries consist of a concussion of the brain, several bad contusions and a broken nose, and may result in her death. Dr. Deleval is attending her, but is unable to give much hope of her recovery. When his wife escaped from him Phillips started toward Palmer, taking to the woods. Officers were notified and started after him, but his track showed that he had returned to the village during the night and he could not be found. Wednesday he was seen in a wood lot toward Belchertown, which is owned and being cleared by C. P. Haynes. The men engaged in chopping there wanted to capture the fellow, but Mr. Haynes was fearful that he might get into trouble by so doing, not being an officer and not knowing the extent of the woman's injuries. Since that time he has heard that Phillips is watching for his father-in-law, to give him a thrashing. The fellow is still at large, but officers are after him and hope to have him in a few days. He was seen in Three Rivers last night, but again escaped.

The trouble between Phillips and his wife is of somewhat long standing. He is a lazy fellow, not inclined to work and did not provide for his family. On one occasion he was arrested for non-support, but promised to do better. Last summer he was employed at Millers Falls as spare man on the railroad, and on one of his visits home abused his wife so that she had him arrested for assault. For the past three months she has been living with her parents, and Phillips claims unfaithfulness on her part, alleging intimacy with her cousin, George LaFranchis, a married man residing in Three Rivers.

Another Railroad Accident.

John Gainey, a brakeman and spare conductor on the New London Northern road, was seriously hurt while coupling at Belchertown Tuesday afternoon. He was to attach the locomotive, which was backing up, to the cars, and signalled the engineer to stop, then stepped between without stopping to see whether his motion was obeyed. The engineer did not happen to get the signal and kept backing, catching Gainey and crowding him against the deadwood of the car, the link of the locomotive striking him in the right groin and making a gash about eight inches long, requiring sixteen stitches to close. He was brought to Palmer and attended by Dr. Jackson of Monson. Gainey is about six feet tall, and to this fact owes his life, for the physician says that had the wound been an inch higher it would have been fatal, which would have been the result with a smaller man.

Yesterday was Candlemas Day, when according to the old saw

"If Candlemas Day, be bright and fair
The half o' the winter's to come, an' mair."

Next Thursday evening the topic of the lecture will be "Universalism, its Doctrine of God." Weeks, but before he could occupy it Mr. Goodes bought it of W. W. Leach, and securing a deed moved in. Mr. Holden claimed that the property had never been taken out of his hands, and sued for his commission on the sale.

The Adams Express Company has withdrawn from the New London Northern road, and now only the American runs over that line. Merchants who have goods come from New York should notify the shippers at that end to send by the American, or they will be very likely to have two express charges to pay, as heretofore the usual route out of New York to Palmer was by the Adams, and now if packages are given to that company they will be brought to Springfield and thence to Palmer, making extra charge from Springfield here, whereas if sent by the American they will come direct with only one charge.

Persons who had not been out of doors for an hour and who happened to look out about 6 o'clock Wednesday evening might have thought everybody was crazy or practising for a gymnastic exhibition. A gentle drizzle had been falling and freezing as fast as it came, making pedestrianism extremely difficult, and causing those who attempted to keep their feet on the sidewalks to go through some queer antics. The tar walks were about as smooth as could well be imagined, and the only safe walking was in the middle of the street. In the night about two inches of wet snow fell, and the sleighing was very good yesterday morning.

None of the new Columbian stamps have been received at the local post office yet, though Postmaster Knox has written for them, and those who desire them for their correspondence are compelled to get them in Monson, Springfield, or some other place which has been more fortunate than Palmer. There is a growing feeling, however, that they are rather large, and business men who have any amount of correspondence still prefer the old issue on account of the smaller amount of gum to be moistened before they can be made to adhere to the letters. The extra amount of "lick" required on 100 of the new stamps is considerable, especially as the flavor of the adhesive substance does not resemble the choicest confectionery.

Gilmore's Vaudeville Stars gave a performance in the opera house Saturday night, and afterward disbanded, which will save other towns from the affliction which Palmer suffered. The performance was a variety one from the start, and the action and dialogue was so decidedly vulgar in many instances that the respectable people in the audience are ashamed to have it said they were there. In justice to the managers of the opera house it may be said that they did not know the character of the company, but theater-going people have a right to demand that something be known of the entertainments which are presented for their patronage, and that they may be assured something different from that which was presented last Saturday night.

A session of the probate court was held in Springfield Wednesday and the following was among the business transacted: Administration granted in the estates of—Lucy Pease, late of Monson, Edwin S. Pease administrator; John F. Parker, late of Monson, Hannah A. Parker administratrix; Thomas Welch, late of Wilbraham, Catherine Welch administratrix. The will of Polly Bradway, late of Monson, Francis L. Bradway executor, was approved. Accounts were rendered in the estates of—George H. Calkins, late of Palmer; Joanna Fuller, late of Ludlow. An inventory was filed in the estate of Edward P. Bliss, late of Ludlow, personal $868. Representation of insolvency was filed in the estates of—David Knox, late of Palmer; Samuel J. Goodenough, late of Wilbraham.

One of the professional men of this place was walking briskly along Monday morning, unmindful of the fact that the light fall of snow the night before was very likely to render invisible and treacherous spots of smooth ice. One hand was in his pocket, jingling together a number of silver pieces, which gave forth a musical and pleasing sound, when suddenly both feet started heavenward. Of course he snatched that hand out of the pocket in order to save himself as much as possible from the effects of the fall, but he neglected to open it before it got out, and the result was a small shower of silver in numerous directions. He managed to find some of it, but the diligent small boy stands a chance to reap quite a harvest on that corner after the snow is gone.

Thomas Dunleavy of the south part of Belchertown was before the district court Monday for drunkenness, and was probated until March 6th, agreeing to go and take the pledge. Tuesday Dexter W. Lombard was again up for toying too familiarly with the ardent, though he protested that he had had nothing but a little cider, and that when the officer found him he was simply suffering from numbness in his hands on account of the cold. "Deck" faithfully promised not to touch a drop for six months, and was probated until March 6th. Wednesday the case of Thomas Ronan of Thorndike, for an assault on a Polander at that place Saturday night, was heard. Ronan protested that he found a crowd having a fight and stepped in to separate them, when he received a blow in the face and concluded that he would let them finish it among themselves. The Polander gave his evidence through an interpreter, and claimed that Ronan, who was the only one he recognized in the crowd, had hit him, and the judge imposed a fine of $10.

The long-continued cold weather and the absence of snow has sent the frost deep into the ground, variously estimated from four to five feet. While at the plumbers have been busy for several weeks thawing out water pipes, these have been mostly the small pipes in basements and cellars. The Palmer Water Company has been remarkably lucky in the matter of having its pipes freeze, though it had one spot on Knox street which gave no little annoyance. The pipe there is a two-inch one, and the street has been graded down since the pipe was put in until it is only about three feet under ground. It froze up a few days ago and it became necessary to dig down to it. But this was easier said than done, for the ground is about as hard as flint. One man worked all day and then had a hole only about four feet square and a foot deep. The pipe was finally reached and thawed out, whereupon it immediately burst in another place, and that had to be repaired also. The condition of the ground made the job a long one, and persons who depended on that pipe for the supply of water in their houses were duly grateful when they were relieved from carrying what was absolutely necessary for their boilers and household use.

In Memory of the Late William Chapman.

The following, from a citizen of Westford, Ct., shows with what regard William Chapman, who died in Palmer January 25, was held in that town, where he formerly lived:—

The sad announcement that came to this community last week of the death of William Chapman caused much sorrow and regret among his old friends and neighbors of the town where he had resided nearly all of his life. He died January 25th at the home of his son Harvey at Palmer, Mass., after a sickness of only a few days. The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia, and the infirmities of advancing years rendered him unable to withstand the decease. He was born in the southeast part of Eastford July 2, 1812, and was in his eightieth year at the time of his disease. He was the last of a family of five children, his elder brother George having been taken away a year ago. He came to Westford at six years of age, and resided here until the fall of 1891, when he and his estimable wife, on account of their advancing years, decided to leave the old home and reside with their son Harvey at Palmer. He followed the business of farming, and in his earlier years was more or less engaged in shoemaking.

Mr. Chapman was an honest, reliable and industrious gentleman, useful in the community and universally respected by all who knew him, possessing to a full degree the confidence of the locality of which he was long a part, and which was his home for more than seventy years. He was an attendant at the Baptist church, and had a strong and heartfelt interest in every movement to make his town stronger. He was in a marked degree true to his convictions and beliefs, and was always to be found on the right side of the moral and religious questions of the day. It could be truly said of him that he was a thoroughly upright and conscientious man, and when he became convinced that he was right on any question, his position remained forever unshaken.

He married, Feb. 25, 1849, a most worthy lady, Roxy Dean of Eastford, who survives him. They at once bought a place and located 1½ miles south of Westford village. This was for nearly 43 years the family home, remaining so until their removal to Palmer. Five children were born to them, three of them are living, Charles D., a farmer who resides in Westford, Emma, wife of Calvin Carpenter of North Coventry, and Harvey, who resides at Palmer, Mass., and who is a rising business man, associated in mercantile life with George E. Buck. All of the children are filling useful and honorable places in the localities in which they reside. The funeral services were held at the Westford Baptist church Saturday, Jan. 28, the pastor, Rev. Samuel Thatcher, conducting the services. There was a strong feeling in the heart of every person present that the husband and father had done his life-work faithfully and well, and that a good citizen had gone from our midst.

From a Former Palmer Preacher, Now in Iowa.

Editor Palmer Journal:—A strong, clear, cold winter we are having out here, with from 12 to 15 inches of snow, fallen at different times, and the finest sleighing I ever saw. The steady cold, several times as low as 20°, and even 25° below zero, for weeks in succession, constitutes a healthy season. But fuel, coal and wood, are scarce and high, which makes it a hard winter for the poor and sick; hard coal $10 per ton, maple and hickory seasoned wood $7 per cord. Provisions of every sort for man and beast are ample and at reasonable prices. Eggs 20 to 25 cents per dozen; the finest turkeys—Christmas and New Years—12½ cents per pound; best beef the same. Churches, lodges, clubs, etc., are all active and thriving, in their own special ways. The famous B. Fay Mills has been in the state, at Grinnell and DesMoines, and at Omaha and Kansas City, across the Missouri river, with the usual marvelous results. Other evangelists, of less note and influence, not a few, are also laboring with pastors and in destitute fields, with more or less success in winning men to the Christian fold. Here also are many supernumerary preachers, some of them superannuated, others in business, or retired in impaired health, and preaching occasionally in vacant pulpits and parishes. Your correspondent is one of these.

One feat he has performed which no other preacher has ever done in this city, and but few in any city. He has preached, more than once, in behalf of the Protestant churches in the city and the same sermon in seven of them, including the Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist, Free Baptist, two Methodist, and the Universalist. And he is willing to preach in the Episcopal, Catholic, and Dunker churches, if invited, on the one condition that he may preach (as in the other cases) what he has first delivered in his own denomination. The last effort of the kind was made January 15th in one of the Methodist churches; and he gratefully recalls the fact that he has seldom ever preached with more ease, interest and vigor than on this last occasion. Of course, having passed the 80th milestone, there is no prospect that this can long continue. But I am often reminded of my good Deacon Lebbeus Chapin's frequent prayer for his pastor, in my early ministry at Palmer: "May his last days be his best days; and may he be a long and lasting blessing for a great while yet to come." The evident sincerity of the petition rendered the alliterative repetition slightly amusing, but all the easier to be remembered. Long years ago the good deacon and his equally friendly associates, Deacon Wilson Foster and Deacon Benjamin Converse, passed on to the further shore; but the memory of their kindly interest in the young pastor and his work still abides.

The cause of prohibition in Iowa is in a precarious dilemma. The united vote of the Democratic party, aided by a few license Republicans, will very likely result in the repeal of the prohibitory law and the substitution of some form of license or local option. But it will not be accomplished without a struggle, and is more likely to prove disastrous than favorable to the success of the Republican party.

Our Governor Boies is naturally looking forward to a cabinet position, or perhaps more hopefully to a senatorial chair, during the incoming administration. The former will be more easily won than the latter, as our state legislature is still Republican by a small majority. MOSES K. CROSS.

Quite a disturbance took place here last Saturday night. It seems a Polish wedding party had hired Union Hall and were enjoying themselves. When about to retire a crowd of individuals who were "under the weather" had a "scrap" with one or two of the wedding party. Persons who saw the affair say that some who interfered in behalf of the Poles were pretty roughly handled by the others.

In response to a personal letter from the pastor, members from the Congregational church and other professing Christians in the parish met in the vestry one evening a short time ago for the purpose of coming into closer fellowship and to better meet the conditions for Christian labor. Since then extra evening meetings have been held and a good degree of interest has prevailed. Next week meetings are to be held on Tuesday and Thursday evenings in the vestry at 7.30.

Perhaps the Sunday problem is no different in our village than in many others, but every law-abiding citizen can not help noticing various indications which go to suggest that it would be well for every one to hold a copy of the laws concerning the enactments passed for the Lord's Day. It ought to result in doing away with Sunday bowling, base ball games, open saloons and open stores on the Lord's Day, or at least to decrease it in a large measure. It is a question which calls for the support of every law and order loving citizen in this village.

She was 82 years old, and has been confined to the house for a number of years, being tenderly cared for by her daughters.

Residents on High street have sworn vengeance on a pet canine, and there is every probability of a scarcity in the dog market if the owner of this one does not care for him. He seems to have a penchant for getting out nights and howling for seemingly endless periods at hours when self-respecting canines should be asleep, and there are people who object to this sort of thing. There is a popular superstition that the howling of a dog foretells of death, and it is reported that one nervous woman has been seriously affected by this dog's actions. He was particularly mournful Sunday night, and the owner has been remonstrated with, so has ample warning.

Rev. J. A. Day of the M. E. church is arranging for a lecture course, to begin next week or the week after. The sociable at the Congregational church parlors Wednesday evening was a decided success, and of the old-time order. Mrs. E. D. Cushman, president of the society, and her able committee on entertaining deserve the highest praise for their labors, and are to be congratulated on bringing these social gatherings to a plane that equals those of the past, which were so popular.

A Monson man who now resides in New York, writes that while riding on the Coney Island train not long ago he met Arthur Maguire (son of J. C. Maguire of this place) who is a conductor and very popular. He took pains to inquire how the Monson boy was doing, and was informed he was one of the best conductors on the road. His brother, John Maguire, Jr., is porter and brakeman on his train.

It was quite an unexpected turn of an intended joke when one of the Town Fathers accosted a lady on the street, saying: "It's quite slippery." "Yes," replied the lady. "You haven't slipped down yet, have you?" queried the T. F. "Oh no," was the reply. "Well," says the T. F., "we read that the wicked stand on slippery places." "Yes," said the lady (who is slightly deaf) "I think a little sand would help it."

Two accidents occurred on Green street the past week as the result of coasting. The little son of R. Clifford Miller ran into a post and severely injured himself about the head, while another party on a "bob" sled ran into the legs of W. A. Squier's horse, throwing the horse and breaking a shaft. The coasting on Main street is also a nusiance, as pedestrians are obliged either to get out of the way of the sleds or be run into.

The recent death in California of Warren Mansur, the cracker manufacturer of Charlestown, is sincerely mourned by Frank A. Moore of this place, who has been in his employ for the past nine years. Mr. Baggs shipped a fine lot of oxen from this place recently, though he found considerable trouble in getting all on board the cars, as some were backward and preferred solid ground for their support. Had it not been for a couple of experienced cowboys who were present and who were capable of handling a lasso with such deftness and accuracy as would have surprised many a older one in the business, serious complications might have been the result.

Nelson Mowry, who died last week, was born in Lyndon, Vt., in 1814. About 1842 he moved to New York city and secured a position in one of the schools as teacher, and shortly after wedded Miss Silber of that city. Being a scholarly man he soon worked his way to the top of the ladder in his vocation, and twenty years of his life were devoted to school work in New York and Newark, N. J. Ill health attacking both him and his wife they, together with their three sons, who had been born to them in the meantime, moved to Wilbraham, he retiring entirely from business life. Their first move toward settlement was in purchasing twelve acres of land for a homestead, which has increased little by little to the number of 250 acres. Mr. Mowry was a modest, unassuming man of correct habits, and highly respected by all who had any dealings with him. He was a member of the Methodist church, and as such was highly esteemed. Not being a politician he sought political favors from no party. In the fall of 1892 the fiftieth anniversary of their wedding was celebrated. To the day of his death Mr. Mowry never wore a pair of glasses. He died as he had lived, quiet and peaceful. A wife and three sons survive him.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 1, 1893.

The step after the adoption of the new council rule, which was moved by Councilor Rice, was the motion of Councilor Jefts to appoint a special committee to inquire into the fitness of the nomination of Messrs. Sayles and Kingman, whom the governor had nominated. The governor protested against the appointment of the committee, and before the motion was carried Lieut. Gov. Wolcott made a statement in favor of the new rule, which is practically a reply to the protest which the governor gave to the public. Then the governor, in an interview, reasserted his position and Mr. Wolcott replied with emphasis, stating his views. So there is a wide difference of opinion.

Mr. Hayes of Lowell proposes a radical change in the liquor law by a bill he has introduced to establish a board of license commissioners in every city in the state, to change entirely the classification of liquor licenses and to reduce the maximum fee from $1000 to $500.

Boston's growth will occupy much time in the Legislature this year. Mr. Bennett of Everett has presented a bill for the appointment of a commission to inquire into the relation of Boston to its suburban cities and towns, to report by the first Wednesday of February, 1894, what is of the most advantage to all the places concerned.

Prompt action was taken by the Legislature on the death of Mr. Blaine. On Friday afternoon, at the first suitable opportunity, Mr. Hutchins of Acton offered an order for the appointment of a committee of three, the speaker to be chairman, with such as the Senate might join, to ask of the Blaine family that the body might lie in state in Boston on its way to interment. Messrs. Moriarty of Worcester and Graham of Quincy were appointed and the Senate added President Pinkerton and Senator Read of Cambridge. They met immediately after adjournment and decided that the president and speaker should go to Washington at once to confer with the family and arrange, if possible, that the remains should lie in state in Doric Hall in the state house one hour. They went, but the burial of Mr. Blaine in Washington prevented carrying out their plan.

The labor men are making a push forward this year. On Friday measures were introduced for a ten-hour day in eleven consecutive hours for steam railroad men; for an eleven-hour day in twelve consecutive hours for street railway men; and for 54 hours' labor for a week for women and minors under 18 years in all manufacturing and mechanical establishments. Bills are also pending to repeal the collateral inheritance tax, and to exempt municipal bonds from taxation.

The temporary highway commission has made a most interesting presentation of the condition of the roads of the state, and the result of its examination is that there ought to be a permanent highway commission to have oversight of the roads of the state. They find that the roads are generally in a bad condition, and the great reason is that the towns are too poor to spend money enough to keep them up. It is estimated that the direct cash loss to the state every year from its bad roads is from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000, to say nothing of the indirect loss by way of damage to animals, vehicles and harness. The commissioners say that four-fifths and possibly nine-tenths of the bad roads of the state are connected with the manufacturing interests of the state. The report of the commission is very thorough, treating of the topographical features, the materials of road-building, the economic relations of the roads to business, and the general methods of road construction which are followed in the state. It is said that 23 per cent of the towns spend less than $1000 a year on their roads; and 50 per cent spend less than $2000. The 75 towns which spent less than $1000 each, spent an average of $15.10 per mile of road a year. The next class, 93 towns, spent an average of $26.70. There are 57 towns which spend from $2000 to $3000 each, or an average of $19.13 per mile a year. There are 32 towns which spend from $3000 to $4000 each. Thus there are 257 towns, covering 82.5 per cent of the total town area, which are financially unable to keep their roads in good condition. There are 22 towns which spend from $4000 to $5000 each year upon their roads, or an average of $94.30 per mile. These are the only ones which are in a reasonably satisfactory condition. The report compliments the commissioners of the towns, as a rule, but finds that they are struggling against hard conditions and that the best they can do is to prevent the further depreciation of their roads. The information gathered by the commission is wholly new and has never before been brought to public attention. It is likely that the facts of money loss from bad roads will compel the Legislature to attempt some reform to satisfy the expected demand. The agitation has proved its reason for being.

The joint committee on the death of Blaine reported fitting resolutions on Wednesday in the Senate, expressing their grief at his death and their high appreciation of his long and varied public services. As the joint convention for the sake of eulogizing the memory of ex-Gov. Butler had met with some opposition, the House voted that Speaker Barrett be invited to deliver a eulogy upon Mr. Blaine on February 23, a committee of three to make arrangements for inviting guests, and other matters and all resolutions in honor of Mr. Blaine to be postponed to that day. The House was apparently half disposed to heed the words of Mr. Bennett that many members desired to pay their personal tribute, for many did not vote at all and 25 were actually bold enough to stand up against this invitation to their own speaker. There were 101 yeas.

The assessment endowment orders have come to the end of their rope, and are in lasting disgrace. Ex-Gov. Robinson, Patrick A. Collins and others were not their counsel this year as last. Commissioner Merrill continues his hot and scornful attacks upon them, and it appears as if the 12 sole survivors of the 56 would soon be compelled by act of the Legislature to close up their business and let their swindling officers get a living where they can. Heart Disease Curable.

The truth of this statement may be doubted by many, but when Dr. Franklin Miles, the eminent Indiana specialist, claims that heart disease is curable and proves it by thousands of testimonials of wonderful cures by his New Heart Cure, it attracts the attention of the millions suffering with short breath, palpitation, irregular pulse, wind in stomach, pain in side or shoulder, smothering spells, fainting, dropsy, etc. A. F. Davis, Silver Creek, Neb., by using four bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, was completely cured after twelve years' suffering from heart disease. This wonderful remedy is sold by LeGro & Lynde. Books free.

Nervous Prostration.

A large manufacturer, whose affairs were very much embarrassed, and who was overworked and broken down with nervous exhaustion, went to a celebrated specialist. He was told that the only thing needed was to be relieved of care and worry, and have a change of thought. This doctor was more considerate of his patient's health than of his financial circumstances. He ought to have advised him to use Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the best remedy for nervous prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, headache, ill effects of spirits, tobacco, coffee, opium, etc. Thousands testify to cures. Book and trial bottle free at LeGro & Lynde's. (5)

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Found Dead.

Last evening a person giving the name of G. R. Thompson registered at Hunt's Hotel, and desired to be called in season to take the 12 p. m. train for Chicago. Being unable to awaken him, the room was entered by means of the ventilator over the door, when the gentleman was found to be dead. He was advertising agent for Sulphur Bitters, which has an extensive sale. The coroner returned a verdict of death from heart disease. His body will be sent East immediately.—Gu. Commercial.

The gossip in Springfield is the sale of jackets now going on at the store. Nearly every other woman you meet has something to say about it.

We did wonders in cloaks about this time last year. We are doing a different kind of wonders now. Then we sold odds and ends. Now everything up to $15 is going at three prices—nothing is reserved.

Every jacket in the store from $3 to $5 is put at $2.50
Every jacket in the store from $6 to $9 is put at $5
Every jacket in the store from $10 to $15 is put at $8.50

Nothing is reserved—nothing. Every jacket is at your mercy in this sale; and a finer lot of garments to be so sold you couldn't imagine. It includes jackets of all sizes from little girls' to large women's; and newmarkets of all sorts and sizes. We put on tables as many as there's room for.

CHICAGO LETTER.

Doubtless every sightseer in Chicago visits the Union Stock yards. He holds his fingers to his nose and gazes at the pens of lowing steers, bleating sheep and grunting swine. He gathers his garments about him and tiptoes his way through the wet, dark warehouses full of beef and pork. He even goes to the slaughter house to see the trained steer, whose business is to lead the guileless country ox up the runway to the maul and knife. Not every visitor has time to study what is the most interesting part of this whole meat business, the canning department. Most of the canned beef, potted tongue, devilled ham and mince meat which is put up in tin cans comes from these stock yards. The firm of Libby, McNeil & Libby has developed this industry to a higher degree of perfection than any of their competitors. The uninitiated has little idea of the inventive genius, labor and expense involved in putting up a can of corned beef. A peep into this establishment will convince one that Yankee genius has not remained "Down East." An intimate friend of mine connected with the above-named firm devoted a half day to showing me how the thing is done. It is all done by machinery. I was reminded of Carleton's lines:

"Just keep your eye on the machinery
And crack your arrangements right thro'."

First there is the making of the can. It is cut in four pieces, shaped, soldered, tested, washed and packed by machinery. This requires some of the most complicated machinery in existence. By hand a man could solder a few hundred cans in a day. My friend has invented a machine which solders 33,000 cans a day! This machine has saved $5000 to the company the past year! It works as if it had brains. By the way, think of the tin this requires. This company keeps on hand $60,000 worth of tin. They import every sheet of it in spite of the McKinley tariff, and it costs this firm $500 a week more than it did before the duty on tin plate was raised. The fact is no tin is made in the United States fit for the meat canning trade. This great house makes its own solder, importing the pig tin for this purpose. The corned beef is cooked by the cartload and dropped into the hopper of an enormous machine, which chops it and fills it into the cans. It requires an army of girls and boys to feed in the cans and place them under the soldering irons. The old cans were round, but all are now square. This square can cost thousands of dollars, but its great advantage is that when they are cooled they contract, pressing the meat into a firm, compact lump. The first can with a key opener cost thousands of dollars, and has been a perpetual bother. The machine for making the can has to be very exactly adjusted.

I was interested in the mince meat department for obvious reasons. This company exercises the greatest care in the selection of materials and in the cleanliness of the process. The sulphuric acid-bleached variety of apples is rejected, and only the home dried kind is used. It is first subjected to steam heat to deprive it of that animal life that was always an interesting study to us youngsters, and then ground and mixed with real meat. One thing that impressed me was the cleanliness of the place. I even visited the sausage room and made a personal examination of the grinder to see if I could find any trace of the traditional canine. I could not. I came away feeling that I could hereafter eat Libby's goods with full assurance of faith.

Of course the one topic around which all other subjects revolve here is the World's Fair. If two persons talk, whether of the weather, or of the last murder, it will somehow be hitched onto the fair. Doubtless the exposition will be to the Chicagoan what the war is to the Southerner, the great date of history.

The next great topic here is President Harper's University. Mr. Rockfeller's last gift makes a total of $3,000,000 which he has donated, and brings the present endowment up to seven millions. It is a fact that Chicago is coming to be the rival of Boston in educational things. We have three fully equipped universities, the Congregational Theological Seminary, medical and law schools ad infinitum—and just now Jim Corbett is here.

The extent of building operations in this city during 1892 was something enormous. Reports show that only the year immediately following the great fire exceeded the last.

Everybody is planning to get rich out of the World's Fair visitors. The sandbagger is already doing a good thing. The usual morning salutation now is, "Good morning! held up last night?" Occasionally a ranchman from the far West facetiously gets the "drop" on the festive thug with a 44 Smith & Wesson. Certainly a gun is a handy instrument just now.

Speaking of making money from World's Fair guests reminds one of the numerous entertainment companies which are organized to "take in" the innocents from the "effete" East. Some of these are reliable and some are not. Arrangements for entertaining guests will be perfect in system and comfort.

The political pot boils over here in Illinois. The first Democratic governor in thirty years is made sick in less than a month, and has gone down South to get rid of the office-seekers. A howl of rage comes all the way from Springfield to Chicago, and it doesn't come by telephone, either. Who can read the signs of the times? During the dedication festivities last October the most popular man in sight was Governor McKinley. He had to take off his hat so often to the multitudes, that he finally went bareheaded three days. And yet, and yet, in three weeks from that time! ! ! ! ! !

Dan Coughlin, the only survivor of the Cronin murder conspiracy, is to have a new trial, so says the supreme court. Therefore he now smokes his cigars in Chicago instead of in Joliet.

D. L. Moody is back again and is planning a great religious campaign for this year. Those who leave their religion locked up at home while they come to the fair will find some here.

Will the fair be open Sundays? Many are coming to feel that even if Congress cannot be induced to repeal the act of last session, the gates will be quietly opened. If suit should be brought against them the case would be appealed, and before the courts reached it, the fair would be closed. Certainly a most systematic and persistent effort in favor of Sunday opening is being made by the friends of that side.

But stay, time fails me to speak of our aldermen, mayor, grade crossing accidents, etc. G. S. ROLLINS.

Deaf for a Year

Caused by

Catarrh in the Head

Catarrh is a CONSTITUTIONAL disease, and requires a CONSTITUTIONAL REMEDY like Hood's Sarsaparilla to cure it. Read:

"Three years ago, as a result of catarrh, I entirely lost my hearing and was deaf for more than a year. I tried various things to cure it, and had several physicians attempt it, but no improvement was apparent. I could distinguish no sound. I was intending putting myself under the care of a specialist when some one suggested that possibly Hood's Sarsaparilla would do me some good. I began taking it without the expectation of any lasting help. To my surprise and great joy I found when I had taken three bottles that my hearing was returning. I kept on till I had taken three more. It is now over a year and I can hear perfectly well. I am troubled but very little with the catarrh. I consider this a remarkable case, and cordially recommend to all who have catarrh." HERMAN HICKS, 30 Carter Street, Rochester, N. Y.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

HOOD'S PILLS are purely vegetable, and do not purge, pain or gripe. Sold by all druggists.

LAST YEAR WE TOLD YOU IN THIS paper something about the Chilton Paints, how they are made from the best materials that can be bought, how they are mixed by machinery, and how we turn out a superior paint to any now made. You did not paint your house last year. Perhaps some one in your place has used the Chilton Paints. If you want to paint this year, go and ask the man who used the Chilton Paint how he liked it, ask him all about it; how much paint it took, if a gallon covered as much surface as he expected, if it was easy to put on, etc. You can see for yourself how it looks. If you don't like the colors he used, send to us for a color card. Sold by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

Great Fortunes Rising Like Monuments.

How Millionaires Succeed in Piling Up Enormous Wealth.

Not Difficult for Any One to Follow Their Example.

It is popularly supposed that a few men like Gould, Vanderbilt and Astor represent the rich men of the country.

This is a great mistake. There are thousands upon thousands of millionaires, men so rich that they cannot possibly spend the interest upon their vast accumulations. Every city, every town, every community has them; it is they who represent the wealth of our country, on account of their numbers.

Now if so many men succeed, what is the true secret of that success?

Two words answer—energy and health.

Any man of indomitable energy and perseverence who is well can succeed.

Ah, there is the rub—who is well.

Men have the energy and ability, to succeed, but they do not possess the requisite health—that strength of the nerves, vigor of the mind and endurance and tirelessness which alone make men succeed.

They feel languid, even weak at times and lack snap and ambition; they know they have the necessary ability, but their energies need rousing. In some cases the stomach, liver and bowels are at fault, or possibly the kidneys are out of order. Nine times out of ten, however, it is lack of nerve strength, nerve vigor, and nerve power.

Numberless men who have ample vigor at first break down in health from the excessive strain upon their nervous and physical systems, as did the well-known S. W. Nourse, Esq., of Hudson, Mass. He strikes the key note of the difficulty, and his advice, if followed, will put men on the sure road to wealth.

MR. S. W. NOURSE, ESQ.

"From constant worry over business matters," he said, "I suffered from the loss of sleep, and became so nervous that I was entirely unfitted for my business. In fact, I feared insanity. I used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. The effect was almost magical. I could again sleep, mental composure, appetite and strength returned. Six bottles of this remedy cured me, and I have remained well to this date. I have recommended Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to many of my friends and neighbors, and have yet to learn of a failure to obtain good results."

Nothing more need be said. Get your health and you will stand every chance of succeeding in life. If you are not well, if you do not feel just right, if you lack the vim, energy and strength to take hold of your work, by all means use the wonderful remedy which restored Mr. Nourse to health and power to work.

You can procure it at any druggist's for $1, and we would say also that it is a purely vegetable and harmless remedy, used and fully endorsed by physicians—in fact it is the discovery of the eminent physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who has made himself famous throughout the United States by his marvellous cures of nervous and chronic diseases and by giving advice free to those who consult him or write to him.

NOT SO NOW.

The slant February sunshine was streaming cheerfully across the kitchen floor, the fire in the cooking stove snapped and crackled, and the kettle sung merrily when Mr. Selden came in from the barn with a brimming milk-pail.

Mrs. Selden started from a brief doze that had momentarily overcome her even while the last ragged stocking, pulled over the dry gourd to be darned, was held in one hand, and the darning needle in the other.

"Asleep—eh?" said the farmer dryly. "I don't have the time to take naps in the daytime."

"I am sorry," said Mrs. Selden, coloring. "But I dropped off before I knew it. The washing was very heavy this morning, and I got overtired, I suppose."

"Work is always heavy," said Mr. Selden gloomily. "Supper ain't ready yet, and the hired man is waitin' out in the shed, and you are sittin' here asleep. Get out the cold pork and beans as quick as you can! Time once lost can never be found again. Every minute counts in farm-work!"

Mrs. Selden put aside the stocking-basket and made all the haste she could, in a nervous, uncertain way, and just then the door opened, and a tall, handsome young man entered, with a cluster of dark-green mistletoe in his hand.

"See what I have found in the woods," said he. "You used to love mistletoe, Fanny, when you were a girl."

"It's very pretty," said Mrs. Selden, with a quick, sidelong glance at it, for her husband's eye was upon her, and she felt its cold scrutiny. "Put it on the window-sill, Carlos, I am too busy to look at it just now. Supper is behindhand!"

"And is that any reason you should hurry yourself to death?" retorted her brother, as he took the heavy iron kettle from her hand. "You will kill yourself with these ponderous weights yet!"

"Humph!" remarked Mr. Selden. "You don't seem in any hurry, young man!"

"Why should I be?" said Carlos Dorr, carelessly, as he flung himself into a seat by the window.

"You've been all day tramping about the woods," said Selden, "and you've fetched home a bunch o' mistletoe!"

"Yet I have not been unoccupied," said Carlos quietly.

"I shouldn't make much profit at the year's end," said his brother-in-law grimly, "if I worked in that sort of a way. Come, Fanny, make haste, the sun is down, and the chores are all to be done yet. And I don't want to be disagreeable, Dorr," with a sinister glance, "but if you mean to stay on here much longer, I shall expect you to help around the place a little."

Dorr took his seat composedly at the table beside his sister, whose faint color varied painfully as she looked from one to the other of the speakers.

"But I don't mean to stay on here," said he.

"Humph!" said Selden. "That was a good offer Deacon Sloane made you to work his farm on shares. I s'pose you'll accept that?"

"I am not fond of farming," said Carlos.

"And there's a fair look-out if you join that lead-mining business at Zoar Hill," added Selden.

"Neither do I intend to become a lead-miner," said Carlos, as unruffled as ever.

"And Dutton Mill can be leased for a song—a capital place for trade," persisted Selden.

"Thanks," Dorr indifferently answered. "But I don't think I should shine as a miller."

"Humph!" growled Selden, as he carved the cold pork into slices of portentious thickness, and served out solid masses of baked beans with them. "I see you don't want to work, that's what's the matter with you."

"Don't, John," said Mrs. Selden appealingly.

"It ain't my duty to encourage idleness," persisted Selden, drinking off his tea in scalding draughts. "Here's Hannah now," as a blooming girl, sufficiently like him in features to declare their relationship as brother and sister, but not at at all resembling him in expression, came in. "She seems to think, because she teaches district school, that she can sit with her hands folded the rest of the day instead o' gettin' a rag-carpet under way or beginnin' a sensible patch-work quilt, such as my mother used to make."

Hannah Selden sat down to the table.

"I'm sorry I was late," said she. "I meant to help Fanny get tea. But the Shakesperean club was a little longer than usual. We finished 'Henry the Fourth' and"—

"'Henry the Fourth'," contemptuously repeated her brother. "What sort o' use is that trash goin' to be to you?"

"Nothing, I suppose," said Hannah. "Except that I like it!"

"Likin' don't help to earn a livin'," said Selden shortly, while the hired man, eating stolidly away at his end of the table, stared first at one, then at another of the disputants, vaguely conscious that there was mental electricity in the air. "As for helpin', Fanny don't need no help. She's able to do her own work—and I don't want no nonsense put into her head about bein' a fine lady, with nerves and neuralgy, and all that sort of thing. Well, where was I? Oh, about Carlos Dorr. He's my wife's brother, and I'm willin' to treat him decent, but I can't have no idlers about here. I'm speaking for his own good."

"Thank you, sir," said Carlos.

"In my household," went on Selden, more irritated than ever, them as can't work shan't eat."

"Well, I hardly come under that category," said Carlos; "I can work; but it isn't pitching hay and measuring out bags of flour. I must claim the privilege of choosing my own profession, and—excuse me, Mr. Selden, of managing my own business."

"Mighty independent, to be sure," growled the farmer; "but I wash my hands of you once for all! And I want you to understand that after to-morrow your room will be wanted for them as is willin' to work fo their livin'."

"You are welcome to it to-night," Mr. Selden," said Carlos Dorr calmly; "after what you have said you can hardly expect me to remain here longer. I will go to the parsonage, where Mr. Mildmay will, I make no doubt, receive me as guest."

And he walked out of the room.

"Oh, John! oh, John!" cried the poor little wife, wringing her thin hands; "and Carlos is the only brother I have left in the world!"

"A shiftless vagabond," roared Selden, "who turns up his nose at them as could buy him up half-a-dozen times."

"John, you shall not speak so!" said Hannah quickly. "Mr. Dorr is not a vagabond! And he never"—

"Ha, ha!" roared Selden. "So you're in the ring, too, are you? You're one of the Dorr worshipers!"

Hannah blushed, but held her ground bravely.

"I honor his talent and respect his principles," said she. "There now! And I don't believe in your theory of work, work, work, all the time, as if life were one eternal treadmill! You've harrowed yourself down to a mere machine, and you are killing Fanny and I think it's a shame. Now you know my opinion about it, and much good may it do you."

And she went over to kiss and soothe her poor little sister-in-law, who was sobbing piteously.

"I hate scenes," said Selden. "Come, Timothy," to the hired man, "let's go out and fodder the cattle afore it gets to be pitch dark. The women will come back to their senses afore we get back!"

Any man that puts an article in reach of overworked women to lighten her labor is certainly a benefactor. Cragin & Co. surely come under this head in making Dobbins's Electric Soap so cheap that all can use it. You give it a trial.

But the next month he heard of the career his wife's brother had chosen with fresh contempt.

"An artist—eh?" said he. "A poor forlorn wretch. He needn't come to me for help!"

"He will not," said Hannah.

"And I forbid any one to speak his name in my presence," said Selden sharply. "He's chosen his own path; now let him stick to it, and keep out o' mine."

It was not long, however, before the demon called Ill Luck began to persecute John Selden. He fell from a load of straw and broke his leg—it healed unsatisfactorily, and he found himself a prisoner in the house just when the farm required his most constant supervision. His wife became ill of malarial fever. The Lead Mining Company collapsed with a thousand dollars of his hard-earned money in its jaws. Tax-bills came remorselessly in. Creditors began to press him. And, for the first time in his thrifty and methodical life, John Selden found himself hopelessly behind in his affairs, with not a cent of money for his necessary expenditure.

Poor Hannah, who had clung faithfully to them through all their year of reverses, burst into tears at last. She had been compelled to give up her school—and with it her income—to wait upon Fanny, and to do the housework.

"What are we to do?" she said despairingly to herself, for she was too good a little nurse to give way to her despondency in the sick room.

"Do!" repeated a cheerful voice, "stop crying in the first place, and in the next, tell me all about it. For there's no one who has a better right to share your troubles than I have, Hannah dear."

And Carlos Dorr, handsome, travel-bronzed and smiling, stood before her.

Hannah's dark, tear-wet eyes sparkled.

"Oh," she cried rapturously, "I never was so glad in my life. John and Fanny are in such trouble."

And then she told the whole sad history.

That evening she came into the room where John Selden lay on a chintz lounge, and his poor wife on a bed in the opposite corner.

"It's all right, John," she said cheerfully. "The taxes are paid, and Squire Mallard's money will be ready for him to-morrow morning. Don't fret, John. Cheer up, Fanny. The wheel of fortune has taken a new turn."

"Have you found a gold-mine?" said the farmer incredulously.

"No," said Hannah, "but Carlos Dorr has come back. He has succeeded splendidly in his profession. His pictures of the Yosemite valley were both sold on the very first day of the exhibition. And he says his purse is Fanny's purse. And here he is now. May he come in?"

John Selden uttered a deep groan of contrition.

"I am ashamed to look him in the face," said he. "I—I am ashamed to ask his pardon!"

"Then don't ask it," said Carlos cheerfully, as he wrung his hand. "We're all one family, aren't we? Or, at least we shall be when I am married to Hannah here. Look up, Fanny. I am glad to see a little color in that pale cheek of yours. I believe I am making more money out of art than I could have done as a farmer, John."

"Forgive me," said Selden hoarsely. "I've made a mistake. I can see it now. But if Fanny gets better and I am spared for another chance, I won't run aground on the old rocks. Hannah, I congratulate you. You've done wisely."

And Fanny whispered softly:

"Dear Hannah, I hope you will be happier than I have been. But, oh, I am so thankful that hope and comfort have come back to us through my brother Carlos."

Truly, there is no preceptor like experience. The lesson had come to John Selden late in life, but he had profited by it, and Fanny's existence was brighter and easier thereafter.

HOW TO COOK A HAM.—An advertisement in another column tells us how to cook a ham. A rule for selecting a ham can be given in a few words: Select Ferris' hams. These and the boneless bacon by the same house are always to be relied upon. The cook may ply her art in vain, if the material be not right to start with. More delicious hams than those bearing the Ferris brand cannot be found and are not to be desired. But having selected the best, proper cooking is then indispensible. I lay down my pen, for the savory odor of one of these delicacies of the dining table has so aroused my appetite that I can no longer forbear. — MRS. BROWN.

YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest, — it is well expended, — you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

When you have a suit of clothes made in proper style, and in the proper way, it is money invested,—as it should be. That is the way we make clothes — in proper style, and in the proper way.

Cupid's Court, St. Valentine's Island.

FEBRUARY 14, 1893.

Dear girl, the birds are pairing,
Coos on the roof the dove;
The bushes all are wearing
The garment green of love,
And blue beyond comparing
The smiling skies above.

The emeralds on the sally,
Too numerous to be told,—
With the primroses tally—
Unnumbered cups of gold;
The violet in the valley
Is blue, but not with cold.

The glass that was so chilly
Has gone up at a bound,
Crocus and daffodilly
With golden light are crowned,
And the green spikes of the lily
Are bursting through the ground.

What is it moves to mating
The bird upon the tree
That for the bloom is waiting
As here I wait for thee?"
The truth I now am stating,
The same is moving me.

O darling! Nature knows it;
The very skies above
With clouds cannot enclose it,
It burns upon the dove;
My dear, do you suppose it
Is anything but love?

It is the time for mating,
Little sweetheart mine,
And why should we be waiting
A day that's more divine?
Sweet end to all debating;—
Come in, my Valentine.

HOUSE TO LET.

"We have got to move!" sighed Selina Spencer. The wind rustled in the leafless poplar trees. The muslin curtains flapped in the draft. Old Dorcas, the colored servant, went on sprinkling the pillow-cases on the pine table in the corner.

"I've seen it coming this long time," said Selina. "The landlord has been as good and considerate as possible"—

"De lan'lord's an old harpy!" said Dorcas. "Lan'lords allays is!"

"No, he's not," persisted Selina. "We owe him eight months' rent already, and I do not know how he is ever to get his money. I would offer him the piano and the carved rosewood parlor set if I thought they would possess any value in his eyes—in part payment, I mean."

Dorcas rolled up the coffee-colored whites of her eyes.

"Dat piano as was Miss Adelaide's when firs' she come from Baltimo' boarding school!" said she. "Dat lubly funichure as was made to order in Annap'lis! No, Miss Lina—not wiv dis chile's consent!"

And she rolled a thin old damask table cloth very tight and packed it into the basket with emphasis.

"Mamma must know nothing of this, Dorcas," said Selina sadly.

"Dunno how you'se gwine to keep it from her, Miss Lina."

"It can be done, Dorcas. I've thought it all out," said the girl. "She must be made to suppose that she's going to spend a few days with my employers at Newport"—

"Has dey done asked her, Miss Lina?"

"No, you goose! I don't suppose they even know that I've got a mother. I am only a typewriter and stenograper in their eyes, and render my services at so much a day. Mrs. Plinlimmon is known all through New York as a female philanthropist, but while she's helping poor immigrants out of the slums and rectifying the slopshop question, she don't appreciate that a well-dressed southern lady may be in sore straits. But she'll make as good a figurehead as any other."

"Miss Lina," said Dorcas, after a brief silence, during which she rolled and sprinkled, patted and folded with unceasing vigilance.

"Well?"

"I knows whar I could git four dollars a week for laundress, or five for cook. T'ink o' dat, Miss Lina?"

"Do you want to leave us, Dorcas?"

The old woman uttered a subdued groan. "Lord knows it ain't dat, Miss Lina! Lord knows it's honor enough to work for de ole Spencers! But it's money we uns wants—an ebery cent o' de ole woman's wages, dey'll come back to de ole missus and Miss Lina."

The long lashes dropped over Selina Spencer's lovely hazel eyes. "It's of no use, Dorcas," said she. "We've got to bend before the storm. Hush! Do you hear that tapping?"

"Somebody knocking at de do'!" cried Dorcas. "Why on arf don't dey ring de bell?"

"No," said Selina, detaining her as she was about to answer the supposed summons. "It's the agent putting up the 'To Let.' But whatever happens, Dorcas, don't let mamma know!"

She rose, and getting up her hat and gloves went up the wide, gloomy old staircase. Dorcas looked after her and shook her turbaned head.

"Meks b'lieve she's pow'ful brave!" muttered she. "T'inks ole Dorcas dunno she's cryin' dis berry minute! Why didn't she marry Marse George Berkely when he axed her and sabe hers't all this trouble?"

Up in the dimly-lighted sitting-room Mrs. Spencer sat, a faded belle of the olden days. The piano was open, the window was full of carefully tended plants; a pink shaded lamp burned on the table, and Mrs. Spencer herself was engaged in crewel work with slow, languid fingers.

"You are later than usual to-night, Selina," said she fretfully. "Perhaps your idea of a dutiful daughter is different from mine, but I think any amount of Shakespeare and Browning classes oughtn't to take so much of your time away from your mother."

"I stopped to give Dorcas orders in the kitchen, mamma," Selina cheerfully answered. "But I'm all ready now. What shall I read to you until the tea comes up?"

"Well," said the poor lady feebly. "I'd like a few chapters of the 'Scottish Chiefs.' It was the first novel my dear papa ever allowed me to read—and in my opinion your 'Ouidas' and 'Braddons' don't come near it."

And while Selina read out the trials of Helen Mar and Bruce the brave, she wondered how on earth she should manage about showing the house to the eager sightseers who would be sure to be attracted by the legend "To Let" on the morrow.

"Can't go in dat ar room,!" said Dorcas, interposing her stout figure between a hard-featured house hunter and the door of Mrs. Spencer's boudoir. "Dat's private, dat ar is!"

"Anything wrong in the room?" sharply questioned the woman.

"No'm," stolidly responded Dorcas.

"Ceilings cracked? Water pipes burst?"

"No'm."

"Then why can't I see it?" with a sudden push in that direction.

She might as well have attempted to charge a battery of artillery. Old Dorcas stood immovable.

"Lady ain't well, mum," said she. "Can't nobody go in dat room. Tole you so afore!"

"Anything contagious?"

"No'm."

"Sure?"

"Yes'm, sartin shuah!"

"Very well," said the house hunter, with a forward jerk of her chin; "I shall take no house that I can't see every inch of!" and she flounced out.

All day long Dorcas fought the army of investigators valiantly, and at night, as she herself observed, she was jes' as tired as if she'd done a double day's wash. Stout ladies peered into the sub-cellar and denounced the drainage; lean ladies poked their parasols into the kitchen sink and tore off strips of the hall paper. Deep-voiced men parleyed as to the monthly rental; fat old gentlemen asked questions in husky accents.

"I shall go crazy," said Dorcas.

The next morning, however, dove-winged Peace once more settled down on the field of action. The agent came up and removed the bill.

"The house is taken," said he.

"Who's took it?" demanded Dorcas, who chanced just then to be scouring the brasses. But the agent either did not know or would not tell. Dorcas heaved a deep sigh. "Den," says she, "we've got to cl'ar out."

The landlord sent Selina a polite note in a day or two. He had concluded, he wrote, to accept her offer of the furniture and belongings as an equivalent for a certain portion of the unpaid rent.

"Now," said Dorcas, "what is we to do?"

Poor Mrs. Spencer was all in a flutter. The Newport scheme delighted her, and she was very busy looking over her wardrobe with reference to her coming visit. Selina had written to the aunt of an old schoolmate of hers, who kept a boarding house in the fair seaside city, asking her lowest price for a comfortable room. Dorcas was to go with Mrs. Spencer as attendant and maid, and Selina had resolved to hire a room in New York and board herself as well as she could.

"But this has been a dear old home," she murmured. "I wonder who will sleep in my room; I wonder whose hands will strike the yellow keys of mamma's old piano and dust my flowing blue china and arrange the old fiddle-backed chairs."

The purple sunlight shone softly in; the scent of a stalk of hyacinths in a glass on the mantel brought back reminiscences of the old southern flower garden, and all of a sudden a voice which she had last heard in those very gardens struck on her ear.

"Selina—have I startled you?"

"Mr. Berkeley!"

He extended a cordial hand.

"Perhaps you fancied that I could not trace you out?" said he. "But I am better at hide and seek than you thought."

She courtesied haughtily. His handsome countenance fell. Evidently he was deeply disappointed.

"Are you not glad to see me, Selina?" he exclaimed, "Ah, Selina! I had counted so much on this interview! I had planned to renew my suit—to ask you once more to be my wife."

She drew her slight figure up.

"You are presuming too much on my very evident poverty, Mr. Berkeley," said she. "I refused you when I was Miss Spencer of Spencer Vale. What sort of a woman should I be if I were to accept you—simply as a protection against adversity?"

"But, Selina"—

"Pray excuse me from any further discussion of the question," said Selina.

"May I not hope to see your mother?" he persisted.

"I should prefer not."

"Do you know, Selina," he said, after a brief silence, "that this is a very bitter mortification to me?"

"Is it? Then what must it be to me?" she retorted almost fiercely, looking up at him.

He stood a second or two gazing sadly at her. Stung by the scrutiny, she swept from the room like an angered princess.

Half a minute later she came hurrying back, full of sweet, strange misgivings. But he was gone.

"I have let another opportunity slip by!" she murmured. "Oh, heavens! where is my life drifting to?"

At that moment Aunt Dorcas ushered in the landlord, a fussy, bald-headed old gentleman with a fur collar to his coat.

"Good evening, Miss Spencer," said he. "I expected to meet the new party here."

"The—I beg pardon," said Selina.

"The gentleman who has purchased this house and furniture," explained Mr. Beasley, "and settled it on yourself and your mother. A friend of yours, I suppose—Mr. Berkeley."

Standing sadly in the shadow of the rustling poplar boughs outside George Berkeley felt the magnetic influence of another presence. A soft voice stirred the twilight air, like the fa-roff music of forgotten days.

"Mr. Berkeley," it said—"George!—please will you forgive me?"

A dead silence ensued.

"Won't you, George?" with a little sob in the voice. "I—I didn't mean to speak so harshly to you. I didn't know then what I know now of your noble generosity."

Silence—only silence still.

"If I accept it for dear mamma's sake, you surely will not misinterpret me. Oh, George! how can you be so cruel? Why don't you answer me? What are you waiting for me to say?"

And still no word broke that haunting silence.

"George," in a low voice, "I've changed my mind. I will be your wife."

"Dear sweetheart," he murmured. "Dear little melting snow wreath. I knew that love would conquer you at last!"

When Mrs. Spencer heard of the engagement she said quietly:

"I always thought they cared for each other, but since your master died, Dorcas, my poor head has scarcely been itself; but make haste and finish the packing. We are going to Newport, are we not?"

And so the wedding trip was to Newport. —Toronto Mail.

THE SOUND OF A SUNBEAM.

One of the most wonderful discoveries in science that has been made within the last year or two is the fact that a beam of light produces sound. A beam of sunlight is thrown through a lens on a glass vessel that contains lampblack, colored silk or worsted, or other substances. A disk having slits or openings cut in it is made to revolve swiftly in this beam of light so as to cut it up, thus making alternate flashes of light and shadow.

On putting the ear to the glass vessel, strange sounds are heard so long as the flashing beam is falling on the vessel. Recently a more wonderful discovery has been made. A beam of sunlight is caused to pass through a prism so as to produce what is called the solar spectrum or rainbow. The disk is turned and the colored light of the rainbow is made to break through it. Now place the ear to the vessel containing the silk, wool or other material. As the colored lights of the spectrum fall upon it sounds will be given by different parts of the spectrum and there will be silence in other parts. For instance if the vessel contains red worsted and the green light flashes upon it loud sounds will be given. Only feeble sounds will be heard if the red and blue parts of the rainbow fall upon the vessel, and other colors made no sound at all. Green silk gives sounds best on a red light.

Every kind of material gives more or less sound in different colors and utters no sound in others.—Pearson's Weekly.

NICKNAMES FOR GENERALS.

The nomenclature of the army was particularly rich in descriptive titles, and a study of the men upon whom these names were bestowed will discover the fact that very few of them were ill-advised or misplaced.

General Ulysses Simpson Grant was at first called "Old United States," from the initials of his name. After the little episode at Fort Donelson, when he issued the edict which stamped him as equal to the emergency, his men enthusiastically declared that those initials stood for "Unconditional Surrender."

In fact, these initials caused him not a little perturbation of mind, and in the end he actually had to abandon his baptismal name to save the dignity of West Point, which unwittingly gave him a name that didn't belong to him; but since it was "writ down" the red-tape complications involved in restoring his right name presented formidable obstacles which he hesitated to tackle. Many of his men called him "Old Three Stars," indicating his rank as lieutenant-general.

General William T. Sherman was familiarly called "Uncle Billy" by his men; and also "Old Tecumseh."

General George B. McClellan, who was a prime favorite with his men, became endeared to them as "Little Mac."

General George G. Meade wore glasses, and was speedily dubbed "Four-Eyed George" from that, and from the fact that he was keen and quick, and very little escaped his observation. The title was one of which he was proud, for he knew it was not designed to cut two ways.

General Ambrose E. Burnside, who relieved McClellan as commander of the Army of the Potomac, was at first colonel of the First Rhode Island, but when he came to the dignity of general he was titled "Rhody." Incidentally it may be stated that General Burnside also gave name to the particular cut of "burnsides" so much in vogue a few years since. "The captain with his whiskers" was considered a very handsome figure.

General Joseph E. Hooker got the sobriquet of "Fighting Joe," which he hated heartily; and the man who was spoiling for a "scrap" could earn it easily by alluding to the doughty general's title in his presence.

The McCook family was well represented in the War of the Rebellion, and the members were generally bunched as the "Fighting McCooks." General Alexander McCook had as one of his staff officers Adjutant-General Dan McCook of Illinois. Other members of the family were Captain Edwin McCook, who belonged to Logan's regiment; Lieutenant McCook, who was in the regular army; Major Anson G. McCook, of the Second Ohio; Captain Henry McCook, of Illinois; and Sheldon McCook, lieutenant in the navy. They bore themselves bravely, and won the title "Fighting McCooks."

General John Pope was called "Saddle-bag John." When he first took command of the Army of Virginia he found everything in confusion, which he set to work to straighten out. When asked where his headquarters were, he replied, "In the saddle."

General Winfield Hancock was known as "Hancock the Superb," a name given him by General Meade after the magnificent manner in which he repulsed Longstreet at Gettysburg.

General Andrew A. Humphreys, who was a distinguished engineer, was styled "Old Mathematics."

General John A. Logan had several titles. One was "Black Jack," because of his tawny complexion and long, black hair. He was also called "Old War Eagle," and the "Black Eagle of Illinois."

General Philip Sheridan, whose stature was far from commensurate with his ability and brain, was greatly beloved by his men, and was called by them "Little Phil."

General Albert Sykes was "Syksey" among his men.

General Henry W. Halleck was nicknamed "Old Brains."

General William S. Rosecrans was speedily dubbed "Rosy."

General Philip Kearney left an arm in Mexico, and was known among his men as "One-Armed Phil."

General Benjamin F. Butler, because of his peculiar drooping eyelids was called "Old Cock-Eye."

General Judson C. Kilpatrick was known as "Kill," an abbreviation of his last name.

Dashing General George Custer, because of his long, yellow curls, was known as "Ringlets."

General George H. Thomas was familiarly known among his men as "Pap Thomas." After the battle of Chickamauga he was given, as a mark of distinguished honor, the title, "Rock of Chickamauga."—Washington Star.

EVIDENCES OF DESIGN.

The sorrel horse with a white star in his forehead kicked clouds of snow into their faces while the sleighbells tinkled merrily. The nipping air brought the blood tingling to their faces and the bright light of joy to their eyes.

They had proceeded two and one-half miles when she felt that she could no longer ignore the presence of his arm about her waist.

Icily she requested him to mind his own business.

"Sir!" she exclaimed, "I am astonished. Did you do that by accident or design?"

Her manner struck a chill to his heart.

"By—by"—his teeth chattered and his articulation was quite uncertain—"accident. I—I assure you it won't happen again."

There was an interval of silence.

"I have no alternative but"—she was dreadfully solemn—"to insist that you take me home at once."

Pale and sick with disappointment, he was about to turn as she bade him:

"One moment please."

He paused in a trance of dread.

"Is it not a fact"—he thought he could detect a world of reproach in her voice—"that your arm was—was there a long time, sir?"

Falteringly he acknowledged that such was the fact.

"Does not that go to throw discredit upon"—she was gazing earnestly into his face—"the theory of accident?"

"Wh-wh-why"—

"John."

She nestled trustingly in his arms, and when he confessed that he meant to do it she said she was awfully glad.—Detroit Tribune.

TO SLEEP AFTER NIGHT WORK.

A Swiss doctor says that many persons who extend their mental work well into the night, or who during the evening follow attentively the programme of a theater or concert, or who engage evenings in the proceedings of societies or clubs, are awakened in the morning or in the night with a headache. For a long while the doctor was himself a sufferer from headache of this kind, but of late years has wholly protected himself from it by simply means. When he is obliged to continue his brain work in the evening, or to be out late nights in rooms not well ventilated, instead of going directly to bed he takes a brisk walk for half an hour or an hour. While taking this tramp he stops now and then and practices lung gymnastics by breathing in and out deeply a few times. Notwithstanding the shortening of the hours of sleep, he awakes with no trace of headache. there exists a clear and well known physiological reason why this treatment should be effective.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

OUR NEIGHBOR'S PITY.

That day our little one lay dead,
And we were sad and sore of heart,
And all of joy of life seemed fled,
Our neighbor sought to ease the smart.
Oh, strange, sweet power of sympathy,
That grief should find assuagement thus!
Our sorrow seemed the less to be,
The more we thought, she pities us.

And then she said how blest was she,
Since God had still denied her prayer,
Nor set a baby on her knee,—
For such a gift meant such a care!
Our pain was stilled by sad surprise,
New feelings in our hearts did stir,
We looked into our neighbor's eyes,
And pitied her—and pitied her.

A FACE LOTION.

"Beauty is only skin deep," is an old adage whose truth and whose falsity could both be proven by logical arguments. If all the beauty of a face were in the fairness of its skin, how few New England women could claim even prettiness. Watch the women passengers on a busy street of any village or city. High degree and low degree; bright, even brilliant, smart, intelligent and intellectual, pretty, expressive, interesting, attractive faces. How few fair; whether light or dark, how few clear-skinned. The fairest, often on a near view, show along the eyebrows a suspicion of lily-white, although paint and powder are regarded with horror by most New England women. There are, besides tan, which is not quite to be looked upon as a blemish, freckles, "white kernels," "blackheads," moth spots, the sallowness of neglect or of ill-health, to say nothing of pimples or blotches. I give below the prescription for a lotion, given by an experienced physician, for eruptions upon the skin of the face. It will clear the skin thoroughly and remove all the imperfections I have named, if local and not caused by some special disease. It will not remove wrinkles, molds, scars, nor birthmarks, and it would not be wise, without the sanction of your physician, to use it for any unusual eruption. I will guarantee satisfactory results, but you should not begin to use the lotion unless you can persevere, for at first it brings impurities to the surface, and for a week or more your skin will not look as well as before its use. It will be three or four weeks before your face will show any improvement, and you must continue the treatment two months, at least; perhaps three or four months. From what I know of its use, I am led to believe that if used regularly for a year, the skin would be entirely free from all blemishes of the kind for which I recommend it.

Lotion—for outward application:—
Sulphur, (washed) 1 oz.
Glycerine, ½ oz.
Ether, 1½ oz.
Alcohol, 10 oz.
Mix.

Pour about a teaspoonful of water into a tiny saucer; add about the same quantity of lotion and sop upon the face with an old handkerchief morning and night. As the scent of the lotion is not very agreeable, you had better wash it off about fifteen minutes after using

Three Months for 25 Cents.

To any one who is not now a subscriber to this paper, it will be sent three months on trial on receipt of 25 cents.

THE scheme to build the governor an executive mansion in Boston is revived by the bill of Mr. Rivers of Milton, which proposes to spend $100,000 for the purpose.

A BROOKLYN minister created a sensation last Sunday by announcing to his congregation that war had been declared between this country and England. It is safe to assume that he is not much of a reader of newspapers.

IT is probable that the secretary of state under the new administration will be Judge Walter Q. Gresham of Indiana, Mr. Cleveland having offered him that position, which he is quite likely to accept. There can be no doubt as to his qualifications for the place.

PROMINENT citizens of Springfield have signed a petition to the Legislature for biennial sessions of that body, and Representative Lyford of that city will push the matter. The state election last fall cost half a million dollars. The reform cannot come any too soon, and should have been here years ago.

WHILE many will agree that the present general observance of Fast Day is not in accordance with the spirit and intention of its founders, there will be general rejoicing that the Legislature has decided against the proposed abolition of the day, and preserved one of the time-honored institutions of Massachusetts.

NEWS of the attempted formation of another coal combine comes from Western Pennsylvania, where 100 mine owners are said to be combining with a capital of $15,000,000 to establish a "uniformity of prices, reduction of expenses and regulate the car service," which means higher prices for the consumer of coal.

ASA P. POTTER, ex-president of the wrecked Maverick National Bank at Boston, has been found guilty on the charges brought by the government, of false certification of checks, which is distinctly a violation of the law. It seems from the evidence that Evans & Co., the brokers, had practically unlimited use of the bank's funds, overdrawing their account many thousands of dollars.

THE governor's council yesterday afternoon unanimously confirmed the nomination of Samuel O. Lamb of Greenfield to be savings bank commissioner in place of the present incumbent, who resigned as soon as the name of Mr. Sayles of Millbury, which was several times voted against by the council, was withdrawn by Gov. Russell. The only thing against Mr. Lamb is his age, he being over 71 years old.

IT must have created something of a sensation in New York when Governor Flower refused to sign the bill legalizing the appropriation of $60,000 by the mayor and aldermen of Brooklyn to pay for the Columbus celebration, on the ground that it was without authority of law and in violation of the city charter. With the tammany method of doing business a little matter of $60,000 is a mere drop which hardly counts.

THE latest news from the Hawaiian islands, which was brought by a steamer which arrived at San Francisco yesterday, was that United States Minister Stevens had established a protectorate over the islands at the request of the provisional government, and that the stars and stripes are flying over the statehouse at Honolulu, pending the action of the United States government in reference to the request for annexation to this country.

As was announced probable last week, the New York, New Haven and Hartford road has secured control of the Old Colony's 600 miles of track, and with it all the Sound lines of steamers with the exception of the Norwich. This deal gives the New Haven road a through double-track line from New York to Boston, with fine Boston terminals, and will probably result in reducing the time of express trains between these two points to five hours.

IT has been popularly supposed that this was the fastest age in history, and the slow-going times of the past are often much ridiculed. Yet Columbus, 400 years ago appears to have been just one lap ahead of everything, even up to the present date. Look on the new Columbian one-cent stamp, the engraving of which shows "Columbus in sight of land," and he appears with a clean-shaven face, while on the two-cent stamp, showing the "Landing of Columbus, which occured about twelve hours later, and he has grown a beard of goodly length. Evidently those were rapid days.

ANOTHER addition to Uncle Sam's navy was launched at Bath, Me., last Saturday, the harbor defense ram Katahdin. This is a new type of vessel for this country, and her formidability lies in the sharp point of her prow, which is expected to pierce the armor of the stoutest vessels when driven at a high rate of speed, while the vessel itself is comparatively safe from harm, being monitor-shaped, the curved deck rising only slightly above the water, a conning tower eighteen inches thick and a smokestack and ventilator being the only marks for the enemy's gunners. Only a few small rapid-fire guns, for use against torpedo-boats and the like, are to be carried.

THE trials in France of the officials of the Panama canal company has been attracting attention on both sides of the water for several weeks. They were charged with swindling and breach of trust, and five of them have been found guilty. Ferdinand de Lesseps, the originator of the scheme, and his son Charles, are fined 3000 francs each and given five years in prison. Two others pay the same fine with an imprisonment of two years, and another pays 20,000 francs with imprisonment for two years. The evidence showed that the whole thing was one of the greatest swindles ever attempted in history. Millions of dollars were subscribed by the working people because of the fame of de Lesseps in completing the Suez canal, and when it was gone more was obtained from the same source by highly colored accounts and bulletins of the progress of the work, when practically nothing had been done. For example, one man was paid 120,000,000 francs for the completion of ten locks, which he announced as done, when all he had expended had been 1,223,000 francs.

There was a terrible holocaust near Dover, N. H., last night, when the county insane asylum, four miles out, was burned, 44 patients perishing in their cells, only four being saved. The fire was discovered about 10 o'clock in the cell of a woman, but how it started cannot be determined.

Indications of petroleum have been found at Brookfield, and boring for the fluid has commenced.

Harvard College gets a gift of $100,000 by the will of the late William F. Weld of Brookline.

The new town hall and library at Dalton, the gift of the Crane family, was dedicated Monday.

Mrs. William C. Whitney, wife of the ex-secretary of the navy, died at New York Sunday.

Algernon Charles Sartoris, who married Nellie Grant, died last Friday.

PALMER NEWS.

Phillips, the Three Rivers Wife-beater, Caught.

Peter Phillips, who so brutally pounded his wife on the ice at Three Rivers Tuesday evening of last week, was apprehended in Springfield Wednesday afternoon. He was recognized on the street by A. P. Trudeau of Three Rivers, who informed the officers. Palmer officers were notified and he was brought to this place that night. In court yesterday morning he was arraigned on a charge of assaulting with a dangerous weapon with intent to kill, and pleaded not guilty. The case was continued till a week from to-morrow, bail being fixed at $1000, which he could not furnish.

Phillips is very dark complexioned, having negro blood in his veins, and is about six feet tall, weighing nearly 200 pounds. He has evidently had a hard time of it during the week which elapsed between the assault and his arrest, and said that he was preparing to give himself up to the Springfield officers. Last week Wednesday night Officers Brainerd and Healey searched in the vicinity of Belchertown for him until about 2 in the morning, and evidently gave him a hard chase. He says that he ran about 20 miles through the woods, swamps and ditches that night, and in crossing the river got in and was wet to his waist. When he left the woods he was wet, tired, cold and hungry and had almost made up his mind to give himself up. He came to a tree and sat down a few moments to rest, fell asleep and did not waken till 5 o'clock the next morning. He obtained a job cutting wood at a farm between Wales and Brimfield, for which he received $7, then went to Springfield Tuesday evening on the train which passes Palmer at 6.10. His wife is improving, and is expected to recover.

Found Dead.

James Burns, about 35, was found dead in his store on Main street in Thorndike about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. He has lived with his mother on High street, but since the slippery going of the first of the week has boarded himself at his place of business. The last time he was seen alive was about 9 o'clock Wednesday morning. A married sister lives in the other part of the building in which his store was located, and yesterday noticing his non-appearance search was made. All the doors and windows were securely fastened, but his brother-in-law secured a view of the room through a closed blind and saw the body lying on the floor. An entrance was then effected by bursting through a trap-door from the cellar.

The deceased was one of a family of eleven children, their former home being the King farm east of the village. About twenty years ago he lost the thumb and two fingers on his right hand in the machinery in the mill, and a few years ago lost his left arm while in the employ of the Fitchburg road as brakeman. About a year ago one of his sisters died, and a few weeks ago his mother died from the effects of a fall on an icy pavement in Springfield. The death of his mother was a severe blow to him, and since that time he has been quite despondent, and has remarked that his days were numbered. Besides this he has been drinking heavily, and it is probable that this was the cause of his death. An autopsy is being held this afternoon by Medical Examiner Holbrook.

No Town Meeting To-morrow.

The town meeting which was to have been held to-morrow afternoon to see about changing the number of the school board from six to three has been indefinitely postponed, the warrant having been found to be illegal. As various stories about the matter have been circulated, some of them casting most unjust reflections on some of the town officials, the JOURNAL gives the facts as they occurred: The warrant was sent to this office about 1.30 last Friday afternoon with instructions that it must be published that day, that being the latest date on which it could appear and the desired business be transacted before the annual meeting of the town. The name of but one selectman, Mr. Brainerd, appeared on the copy, but the JOURNAL was informed that Mr. Getchell had promised to sign it that afternoon, and was instructed to add his name to the warrant in the printed copy. This was according done, as ordered, it then being nearly time for the paper to go to press, and as soon as the warrant was set up word was sent to the constable, who called for it a little later, but by some misunderstanding did not take it to Mr. Getchell for his signature that afternoon as expected. Therefore the original warrant did not contain Mr. Getchell's signature at the time the paper was issued, and the meeting would not be legal if held.

Catholic Observance of Lent.

Next Wednesday is Ash Wednesday, the beginning of Lent, and the following regulations for its observance by the Catholics of this diocese have been sent out by Rt. Rev. Mgr. Thomas Griffin, D.D., and will be read from the pulpit of St. Thomas's church next Sunday:

Lent begins this year on the 15th day of February. All the days of Lent, except Sundays, are fast days of obligation.

By permission of the holy see the use of fresh meat is allowed, once a day only, on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays in Lent, except the Saturdays in Ember week and Holy week. The use of meat on Sunday is not limited as to the number of times. Lard and fat of any kind, as well as butter, may be used in preparing food on any day in Lent. This dispensation is extended also to the days of fast and abstinence throughout the year. A collation, not exceeding the fourth part of an ordinary meal, is allowed in the evening, at which eggs, fish, butter, cheese and milk may be used. In the morning a small piece of bread is allowed with a cup of coffee, tea, chocolate, or some similar drink. When the principal meal cannot be taken at noon, the order may be inverted, and the collation taken in the morning and the dinner in the evening. The use of flesh and fish at the same meal is not allowed, even on Sunday. Those who are excused from fasting are not restricted as to the number of times they wish to eat meat on the days on which meat is allowed. The following persons are exempt from the obligation of fasting: All under twenty-one years of age and those of advanced age, the sick, those who cannot fast without grave injury to the health, women in pregnancy and nursing infants, and all of those whose duties are of a very laborious or exhausting nature.

Wednesday George Brown of New York also declined to work, requesting the court to impose a sentence of six months or a year instead. The court concluded to make it both, and he will assist at the state farm at Bridgewater for the next eighteen months.

Williams's Bell Ringers failed to put in an appearance at the opera house Tuesday night, as advertised, but neither the managers of the opera house nor the company lost much, judging from the small number who presented themselves for admission.

Mr. and Mrs. Horace Stimson entertained a number of friends in their new house at Palmer Center last Friday evening, and those who were present enjoyed the occasion greatly. Refreshments were served, and music helped the time to pass quickly.

The January thaw came Monday, a few days too late, to be sure, but it made up for that in the slippery condition in which the streets were left that night and Tuesday morning. All the snow had disappeared, leaving the streets covered with glare wet ice.

There was a heavy fall of rain last night, which has continued more or less to-day. As the ground is frozen none of it is absorbed, and so all passes into the streams. The river is unusually high, and if the rain continues it is quite likely that considerable damage will result.

Starks, for commission on a sale of real estate, which was tried in the superior court last week, the judge ordered a verdict for the plaintiff of $64, but reports the case to the supreme court, where if the lower court's interpretation of the law is sustained the verdict will stand, otherwise it will be set aside and a verdict given for the defendant.

Reserved seats are on sale at Allen's drug store.

The train which is due from the west at 8.35 p. m. met with an accident a little east of Hinsdale Monday night, delaying it until 12.27. A piece of iron had dropped from a preceding train in such a position that when the locomotive struck it the trucks were thrown from the tracks. Fortunately the locomotive kept right side up and near the rails, or there might have been a serious wreck at the bottom of the high embankment. Mrs. F. W. Harrison and C. E. Fuller of this place were on the train.

Father Hart of St. Thomas's Catholic church has received from Bishop Beaven a circular in reference to the Pope's golden jubilee, which is to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the elevation of the pope to the episcopate. Work at the new plant of the Palmer and Monson Electric Company is progressing rapidly. The bridge between the Palmer and Monson sides of the river has been raised five feet and eight inches, and all of the stonework completed with the exception of the abutment for the dam on the Monson side of the river.

The case of D. B. Matteson against H. C. Strong, for damages on account of being bitten by the latter's dog, resulted in a verdict of about $375 for the plaintiff at the trial in the superior court. Matteson claimed that while going along Main street in this village, having in his charge a dog belonging to another man, Strong's dog attempted to pounce on the other dog; Matteson attempted to protect his dog by holding him, and when the other dog came up received a bite on his finger. The defense was that the dogs were fighting, and that in attempting to part them Matteson received the bite.

Rev. H. F. Moulton delivered his second lecture in the course on "Universalism" in the lecture room of St. Paul's to an increased audience last evening. His subject was "The Universalist Doctrine of God." He began by saying that in the Universalist creed written in 1803 the statement of the doctrine of God is: "We believe that there is one God, whose nature is love." The lecturer then pointed out conclusive evidence for believing in a Deity, and emphasized his fatherhood, "to us," in the words of St. Paul, "There is but one God, the father." The lecture topic for next Thursday evening is "Universalism, its Doctrine of Christ." Mr. Moulton's sermon theme for Sunday morning will be "The True Measurement of the Worth of Life."

There were wild visions of sudden wealth in the minds of three young men of this place Monday which were suddenly and ruthlessly dashed to the ground. They had discovered a method of removing snow from the surface of ice which was much cheaper and easier than by the slow method of scraping it away, and proposed to procure a patent and then go into the business of clearing the surface of ice ponds and skating rinks. Kerosene was to be poured on the snow and ignited, thus burning the snow off. A test was made in the rear of the Converse House in the presence of numerous spectators, after which there did not seem to be so much money in the scheme as on first thought, and the three interested parties have not yet given up their present positions.

There was a lively scrambling last Friday among the reporters in this town for the daily papers, after an item which would have made a choice morsel had it proved true. It was reported that the body of an infant had been found in the hay in a barn just out of the village the night before. One scribe walked about a mile in the rain to find that the owner of the property knew nothing of the matter until it was broached by the reporter. After the newspaper representative had gone the owner thought the matter over, getting more and more indignant, and when the next reporter called on the same errand was in a frame of mind which boded no good for the originator of the story. The matter was finally sifted to the bottom by the parties most directly interested, and was found to have originated in the attempt of one person to "spring a gag" on another, who did not "bite" but took the preliminary statement as fact and spread the report.

Word was received last Friday night that Miss Jessie E. Hill, granddaughter of Samuel Edgerton of this village, with whom she had lived the greater part of her life, had died that afternoon at her home in West Troy, N. Y., of Bright's disease. The news was a sad blow to her relatives here, as it was not known that she was sick. She was up and dressed the Wednesday before, and on the morning of her death had sat up and read the newspaper, dying suddenly at 5 in the afternoon. The body was brought here Monday night, and the funeral held from the residence of Mr. Edgerton on Park street Tuesday afternoon. She was 19 years of age, and was a member of the Baptist church. The Sunday school of the church sent a floral offering, and a quartette composed of W. A. Weld, W. R. Milligan, E. B. Taylor and A. S. Campbell, sang. The bearers were Luther Cobb, Charles Kempton, Frank Washburn, Edwin Brooks, Forest Burr, Leland Washburn.

Politcs are beginning to take a start, and judging from what is being said this place will do its utmost to secure a representation on the board of selectmen. The question of appointing a superintendent of schools is favored by many, while there are others who oppose it on the ground that capable men cannot be secured to act as school committee without pay.

If practice has anything to do towards the advancement of the newly organized band and drum corps, it will not be a great while before they are both heard in public. Thorndike's experience with bands has not been very satisfactory in the past, for about the time the organization became capable of playing in public the members began to drop out. It is hoped this one will do better.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 8, 1893.

The struggle in the council over the nomination of Irving B. Sayles of Millbury to be savings bank commissioner culminated at the meeting on Thursday afternoon, when Sayles was rejected by a vote of six to three, the three being Lieut. Gov. Wolcott, Councilor Leeson, another Republican, and Mr. Donovan, the only Democrat in the council. After the rejection of Mr. Sayles Gov. Russell nominated Samuel O. Lamb of Greenfield, and his case went over for one week under the rules.

Doubtless a sensation will be created by the reporting unanimously by the joint judiciary committee of the bills to abolish Fast Day as an institution, and to substitute April 19 as a spring holiday. These matters are in separate bills, and the passage of the one does not imply the passage of the other.

The recess committee on revising the judiciary of the state wanted much to get $1000 apiece for their work, but the council allowed them only $500. Perhaps sometime the very interesting story about this matter will come out.

If one were to draw a general conclusion from the enormous pile of business which has been submitted for this Legislature to do, it would be that there is a comparatively small proportion of unimportant matters, but that nearly all of them are of consequence and that many of the changes proposed would be of advantage to some particular cases, leaving it to the Legislature to say whether it would be good policy to extend the provision to the whole state. These matters have gone to the committees, and if the people have any urgency that the session be short, they should make their pressure felt now, rather than in May and in early June, when the members are doing all the work they can. The loss of time from the inexperience of members is felt most severely at this stage of the session, when they do not understand how to lay out the work of the committees so that reports may be ready for these wasted afternoons. Thorough system and patient application to work are necessary just at this season. But it takes time for new men to learn the ropes, to get acquainted with each other and with the ways of doing business. This is a leading cause for long sessions, but if the people insist upon frequent changes of representatives, they must expect to bear the consequences.

A strong set is being made for the repeal of the law to limit the number of liquor licenses, and it will have strong support also in the House. Rev. Mr. Brown, who is the only clergyman in the House, says that his experience in Fall River under the no-license and license limitation laws has been such that he believes that the open saloon is less harmful than the kitchen barrooms, where even little children become intoxicated. The Boston board of police has taken ground against the law, and Commissioners Osborne and Whitney appeared on Wednesday before the liquor law committee in favor of the repeal. It is said that the liquor law committee is made up against the temperance people. This is contrary to the custom and courtesy of the state house, which require that the liquor law committee should be composed of temperance men in the majority, and that a majority of the woman suffrage committee should be in favor of the petitioners who come before them.

The debate in the House on the abolition of Fast Day was remarkable from the fact that the support of the measure came from the men of most distinctly moral and religious sympathies. Rev. Mr. Brown of Fall River, a Scotchman, and Representive Roe of Worcester, a man of great moral force, were the most earnest speakers for the bill, and they put their advocacy on the ground that under present observances the day is a sham and a farce. The spirit which prompted its establishment is dead, and Christianity demands what is honest and sincere. The opposition was from men who respected the tradition of the fathers and hated to see an old landmark abolished. One of the brilliant speakers said that Fast Day was established to commemorate the landing of the Pilgrims, and hence should not be abolished. Though there was no count of the House at the vote on Tuesday, yet there was no doubt, from the volume of voices, that a large majority were in favor of the bill. But the conservative element came to the front on the question, on Wednesday, of passing the bill to be engrossed. There was not much new in the argument, but the conservatism of the House seemed to be aroused, members asserted more than on Tuesday that the day was not a farce, but that there were a great many people who observe it religiously and would be grieved at its abolition. Then Mr. Bartlett of Haverhill said that there was but one Massachusetts, but one band of Pilgrims and but one Fast Day as their memorial. He would have Massachusetts different from all other states in the observance of Fast Day. This touched many and the applause was loud. On the roll call, there were 92 yeas to 111 nays on passing the bill to be engrossed. Mr. Cook of Boston tried to procure the adoption of a resolution in favor of annexing the Sandwich Islands, but the House, without any debate, was against him by 85 to 63 on the question of suspending the rules to admit the resolution,—not the necessary four-fifths.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Business at the Flynt Quarry.

Affairs at the quarry of the W. N. Flynt Granite Company are in a very satisfactory condition. Orders for the coming season are being taken, and the outlook is for plenty of work. Among the new contracts recently received is one for 500 carloads of bridge ashlar and foundation stone. Another calls for a large quantity of fine cut stone for Phillipsburgh, N. J., while still another is for the stone to enlarge a Catholic church at New York recently built by this company. The record of business for the past year has been particularly flattering, having been the largest in the history of the quarry. During 1892 there were shipped from the quarry 33 more cars and 110 more wagon loads of stone than in 1891. Previous to this winter but little work has been done at the quarry during cold weather, but in spite of the unusual cold 160 cars of stone were shipped during January. In connection with this fact it is interesting to note that since the opening of the railroad to the quarry in 1877 but 443 cars of stone have been shipped in the Januarys of the fifteen years previous to 1893. There are about 100 men at work now, but as soon as the weather will permit the company will have employment for about 250 men. Negotiations are being made, and will soon be completed, for a new locomotive, to be used in moving cars about the works.

Death of Sylvanus Darling.

In the death of Sylvanus Darling, which occurred last evening, Monson loses a substantial citizen who has been a resident for 35 years, coming here in 1855 to fill a position of overseer of finishing in the factory of the late Horatio Lyon, and was soon promoted to the general superintendency of the same. In 1873 he resigned to take a similar position in Wales at the Dell mill, but returned to Monson in the spring of 1877 and was employed by R. M. & Theo. Reynolds as general superintendent from that time until last fall, when failing health obliged him to resign. Always faithful to the interests of his employers and interested in the welfare of those who labored under him, he will be much missed by all. He leaves two children, Charles W. and Alice. The two mills of the Messrs. Reynolds will close to-morrow afternoon, and the funeral will be at his late residence at 2 o'clock.

Several Ware people started Tuesday morning for Montreal, to attend the grand winter carnival, round trip tickets having been sold at reduced rates.

M. L. Collis, the florist, who came from Enfield and built a new hot house west of the village, has taken L. L. C. Tucker as a partner, and they will do business under the firm name of Collis & Tucker.

The body of Maurice Moriarty, who was killed by the cars at Weston last week, was brought to Ware for burial, the funeral being held on Saturday under the auspices of the A. O. H., who came out in a body.

William Yale, formerly of Ware, now of Enfield, was in court last Friday on the charge of maintaining a liquor nuisance, the case being continued until to-day, when he was fined $125, but appealed and was placed under $300 bonds.

The entertainment to be given by the Woman's Relief Corps next Tuesday evening promises to be more than usually interesting, as some of the more interprising and wide-awake ladies of the town are engaged in it. The costumes are said to be very fine.

Meetings have been held at the Chapel Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Rev. F. L. Goodspeed of Amherst preached the last three evenings. Quite a number have expressed a desire to come to Christ and live a Christian life.

The Ware Young Men's union has sent out invitations to a reception and athletic exhibition, to be given at the rooms next Monday evening at 7.30. The entertainment will embrace music and singing, closing with a social dance. A neat programme will be given those who attend.

She Committed Suicide.

Mrs. F. C. Cone, at Paris, left this letter: "My husband—Forgive me if I cause you trouble, but I suffer so. You do not know what these long, wakeful, wretched nights are to me; and I am so tired, darling—the pain will never be better. It is not easy to take my own life, but I have been sick so long. Good-bye, my husband; I love you. Your Wife." This is but one of thousands that give up instead of using Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and being speedily cured of their wretchedness. Go to LeGro & Lynde and get an elegant book and trial bottle free. (6)

Grave Mistakes.

Physicians frequently make mistakes in treatment of heart disease. The rate of sudden deaths is daily increasing. Hundreds become victims of the ignorance of physicians in the treatment of this disease. One in four persons has a diseased heart. Shortness of breath, palpitation and fluttering, irregular pulse, choking sensation, asthmatic breathing, pain or tenderness in side, shoulder or arm, weak or hungry spells, are symptoms of heart disease. Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure is the only reliable remedy. Thousands testify to its wonderful cures. Books free. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. (6)

Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills

Act on a new principle—regulating the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new discovery. Dr. Miles' Pills speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles, constipation. Unequaled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! 50 doses 25 cents. Samples free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 52-17

With pure, vigorous blood coursing through the veins and animating every fibre of the body, cold weather is not only endurable but pleasant and agreeable. No other blood medicine is so certain in its results as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. What it does for others it will do for you.

Didn't Want a Girl.

Last summer my wife's health was all run down and she wanted me to hire a girl to do the work. In a little while I found one I thought would suit her, when to my surprise she said I need not hire any one, as she felt much better, and thought another bottle of Sulphur Bitters would cure her.

Could Not Keep

Shop without them. I consider your Sulphur Bitters a remarkable blood purifier. I know of several people, whose cases were considered hopeless, that have been entirely cured by your medicine. The sale of Sulphur Bitters is so large here that I could not keep shop without them. E. S. YATES, Pharmacist, 99 Essex street, Lawrence, Mass.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February, 1893.

The gossip in Springfield is the sale of jackets now going on at the store. Nearly every other woman you meet has something to say about it.

We did wonders in cloaks about this time last year. We are doing a different kind of wonders now. Then we sold odds and ends. Now everything up to $15 is going at three prices—nothing is reserved.

Every jacket in the store from $3 to $5 is put at $2.50.
Every jacket in the store from $6 to $9 is put at $5.
Every jacket in the store from $10 to $15 is put at $8.50.

Nothing is reserved—nothing. Every jacket is at your mercy in this sale, and a finer lot of garments to be so sold you couldn't imagine. It includes jackets of all sizes from little girls' to large women's; and newmarkets of all sorts and sizes. We put on tables as many as there's room for.

Second floor.

Distinguished bargains of the most substantial staple character.

Look through your linen chests and bureau drawers, get an idea of about what table linens and towels you'll need for the rest of the year, then come to the sale of linens now going on.

Decided bargains are plenty. Interpret this liberally, if you please. Expect much for little, and a good variety of good things, too, in the bargain.

Half bleached damasks, 19, 25, 33, 39, 45, 50, 58, 65 and 75 cets a yard.
Red-bordered damask, 39, 45, 50, 65 and 75 cents a yard.
Bleached damask, 39, 45, 50, 54, 69, and 87½ cents a yard.
Damask napkins, 55 cents, 75, 87½, $1, $1.25, $1.37½, $1.50, $.75 and $2.00 a dozen.
Towels at 8, 10, 12½, 15, 19 and 25 cents each.

Something like $25,000 is the value of the linens to be offered in this sale. You can guess something from that.

Brief but Pointed.

Words that Speak Volumes.

Three years ago I was troubled with Brights's Disease, the best Doctors said I could not live three months. I then commenced using Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and I am now well.
C. L. SEAVER, Birmingham, Ct.

I was afflicted with a tumor growing over my right eye. Eminent physicians said there was no help for me. I began at that time to use Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy and the tumor entirely disappeared and Favorite Remedy saved my life.
W. M. PACKER, Portlandville, N. Y.

If it were not for Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy I think I should die from constipation. Favorite Remedy gives me an appetite, produces refreshing sleep and cured me of a nervous affection I had for years. It is a tonic and I could not live without it.
Mrs. JULIA A. YEAPLE, Kingston, N. Y.

Are you a victim of any kidney or bladder difficulty? Try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy at once, as it cured me when about to give up all hope.
F. C. BRINK, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Have you the symptoms of dyspepsia, sour stomach, painful weight in the abdomen after eating, palpitation of the heart, short breath, headache, constipation, drowsiness, loss of appetite? Then lose no time, but take Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. It is the discovery of a physician who has used it for years in his private practice, and it has by many thousand tests been proven capable of doing all that is claimed for it.

An Antique.

She gazed at the tall old clock on the stair:
"Twas a relic of days long fled,
A costly timepiece, a treasure rare,
But lately purchased and perched up there,
"A quaint old gem!" she said.

"Did you stand in some old Colonial hall,
Where the firelight flickered red
On polished floor and on carven wall,
Where fell the shadows of chair-backs tall
And straightly stiff?" she said.

"Did you look, perchance, on a winsome maid—
Alas! a century dead—
Softly demure and sweetly staid,
In a tortoise-shell comb and gay brocade
With a very short waist?" she said.

"Did you see her lover, a comely swain,
A-bending his stately head
To touch her lips and to touch again,
Till her fair cheek warmed with a crimson stain?
O quaint old gem!" she said.

"Oh, the wondrous pictures once known to you!
And the tales that you have read!"
But the tall old clock fetched a grin to view—
"I wonder what she'd remark if she knew
I was made last week?" it said.

—E. A. Opper, in January Harper's.

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

THE KIPLING BABY.

"What ails the youngster, any way?" said Pa-in-stocking-feet.
"I think she wants to go to sleep," its mamma said, discreet.
"Why don't you let it do so then?" said Pa-in-stocking-feet.
"Perhaps you'd better walk with her," its mamma said, discreet.
And he's took the blessed infant, he's a-walkin' to an' fro,
And his side remarks are lively, though he makes 'em rather low,
And he warb'es "by-o-by-o" in a voice of utter woe,
While a-walkin' of the baby in the mornin'.

HOW MANY ARE THERE?

Would Make a Startling Array of Figures.

An Interesting Count Which Would Reveal a Great Deal.

Some Inside History in Feminine Lives.

Women are great sufferers from nervousness, weakness, nervous prostration and debility. Thousands of girls droop and languish in the close, confined atmosphere of shops, factories or offices, and hundreds of thousands wear out their nerve force and power in household cares, family bereavements and responsibilities and work which never ends.

Here lies the great strain upon the nervous systems of women. Here is the cause why so many women complain of being weak, nervous, tired and exhausted.

They have little or no rest; their life is one continual round of work, duties here, duties there, duties without number. What wonder that such women go to bed at night fatigued, and wake tired and unrefreshed in the morning! What wonder that they become worn out, so to speak, in nerve and vital power! What wonder that they have great weakness, exhaustion, pains in back and limbs, together with the distressing female complaints which are always caused by loss of vital strength and vigor! Of how many thousands of women is the above a true and exact transcript of daily life? They have worn out and exhausted their nerve force and physical power. They must work, but it follows as surely as the day follows the night that they must receive from some source a renewal of nerve force and physical energies, or the human machine will soon cease to run at all.

ETTA E. HAVEN.

No one knows these facts better than women themselves, and the inside history of feminine lives would reveal a story of tired bodies, unstrung and excitable nerves, wearied limbs, aching heads and backs, with that exhausted, dragged out feeling which makes their lives miserable.

The well known Etta E. Haven, of New Boston, Conn., writing upon this subject says:

"Dr. Green's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is a wonderful remedy for nervous prostration, and those terrible tired, weak feelings that make life a burden almost too great to bear. I feel that I cannot say enough in its praise for what it has done for me. It gives one the most restful sleep, and in fact does all and more than all it claims to do. I wish every poor, tired woman on the face of the earth could be induced to try it for three days; they would then understand its value, and life would not seem so wearisome and undesirable."

It is a fact that the great nerve invigorant and female restorative is Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. No remedy in the world is so sure to bring back the bloom and color to the wan and faded cheeks and brilliancy to the hollow and haggard eyes, the lightness and elasticity to the weak and weary step, the strength and vitality to the unstrung, shattered and worn out nerves. It is the greatest of all uterine tonics and regulators, and perfectly and completely cures all female weakness and disease.

If our readers are troubled in this way we should advise them by all means to use this remarkable remedy. We know it to be purely vegetable and harmless, and it is in everybody's reach, as all druggists sell it for $1. It is the discovery and prescription of Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the eminent specialist in the treatment of nervous and chronic diseases, and the doctor can be consulted free, personally or by letter, which is a guarantee of the great value of the remedy.

THE DONATION PARTY.

"I can't say I believe in these here donation parties," said Mr. Gregory, grimly. "If we can't afford to pay our minister in good hard cash, then say I, we hadn't ought to indulge in the luxury of having one at all!"

Deacon Miles smiled—a hard, hyena-like smile.

"It's the custom," said he. "And we'd all ought to do our duty."

"But I hain't nothing to give," pleaded the honest farmer. "Crops has been short this year, and I never felt poorer in all my born days!"

"There's them russet apples o' yourn?" suggested the deacon.

"Oh, good land o' Goshen!" said Mr. Gregory. "Ain't fit to feed to the pigs!"

"Do not speak hastily, Brother Gregory," said the deacon sanctimoniously. "I do not in the least doubt but that to our clergyman all the goodly fruit will be useful and acceptable."

"But them ain't goodly," said Mr. Gregory with a grimace. "I like Mr. Corbin, and I'd like to give somethin' worth havin' to the donation. But I can't. And that's how I'm situated exactly."

The deacon smiled again—the same adamantine, dentist's showcase sort of a smile, and went home to pick out the leanest of his fowls, the sourest and hardest of his dried apples, the most questionable bag of last season's buckwheat to make a gift offering to the Lord. For the deacon was a thrifty and well-to-do individual, with money in the bank and a conveniently elastic conscience. And he was already planning to do a little "serious" matching, whereby he might foist his hard-visaged daughter, Prudence, who had just passed her nine-and-thirtieth summer, upon the minister, who luckily was still unmarried.

"A clergyman," said the deacon, piously, "can greatly enlarge the field of his usefulness by forming a judicious alliance with some sensible female who feels the importance of the ministry."

And, to speak the truth, a hint of this little conspiracy, dropped into Mr. Corbin's ear, had already tended to make him not a little uneasy. For Miss Prudence Malinda Miles had a countenance like a wooden doll and a figure resembling a bed post.

"Beauty is but skin deep," said the clergyman to himself; "but really, Miss Miles does not commend herself to the fancy. And if one pauses, by instinct, to select a rose-bud instead of the colorless flowers of the potato blossom, I don't see why a pretty girl shouldn't make as good a wife as one with a plain face."

Mr. Corbin was sitting at his desk, considering the "Thirdly" of his sermon that day, when old Hester, his colored housekeeper, came to the door.

"Please, sir," said she, "there's Mr. Gregory's Patty wants to speak to you."

"Ask her to enter," said Mr. Corbin. "I have seen her occasionally in the Bible class, and she is a devout, finely natured damsel."

Patty Gregory came in, accordingly—a rosy, fresh-faced girl, with limped brown eyes, laughing lips and jet-black hair forming itself into natural rings and tendrils on her forehead.

"Mr. Corbin," said she, timidly, "would you like a basket of blackberries?"

"'Blackberries?'" repeated the good man, thinking how like one of Millais' pictures Patty looked, as she stood there in the checkered shadow of the hop vines which were trained across the study window. "Truly, they are a goodly fruit and most luscious to the taste."

"I'm so glad you like them," said Patty. "Because I've picked nearly a peck on Mullock hill, and—and father is poor, and we have nothing to give you at the donation party. And if you would accept the blackberries, I should be so thankful. Because father feels that he has enjoyed your sermons and he would like to give something, be it ever so little."

"The gift is most welcome, Miss Patty," said Mr. Corbin. And so Patty Gregory went away, leaving him in a sort of brown study.

"Father," said Patty, when the good farmer came to his supper, "I've thought of something."

"You always was a master-one for thinking," said Mr. Gregory, looking admiringly at the olive face with its sparkling eyes.

"That old engraving that Grandfather Mullett left us in his will," explained Patty, "with the bronze frame, that hangs over the best room mantel, 'Martha and Mary at Bethany;' don't you remember? The one that Mr. Corbin admired so much when he was here. I'm told that the scholars and gentlefolks admire these old engravings. And why don't you give it to Mr. Corbin for the donation?"

"I'm ashamed to take an old picter like that," said Mr. Gregory, dubiously. "Before Widow Starke with her barrel o' flour, and 'Squire Hodge's quarter o' lamb, and Mr. Johnson's firkin o' June butter, and all them things as is really worth something!"

"Ask him if he would like it," suggested Patty. "And take it quietly around before any one else comes."

"It ain't a bad idea," said Mr. Gregory, smiting his hand on the table. "I will! That 'Marthy' is a pretty picter, when you come to look close at it. The palm-trees is dreadful natural, and the well a'most makes you feel thirsty. It's a sacred subject too, and ought to suit the parson. I'll take it around this very day. P'raps he will be pleased."

"But maybe you'd better ask him first, father," said Patty.

So that Mr. Corbin's quietude was a second time interrupted by Mr. Gregory, eager and smiling.

"I guess, parson," said he, "I've got somethin' as'll suit you this time!"

"For—?" Mr. Corbin looked inquiringly up.

"For the donation party," said the farmer. "It's my 'Marthy.'"

"Sir!" exclaimed the clergyman in surprise.

"They tell me you like her," said Mr. Gregory, in an off-hand manner.

"I do," said the clergyman. "Very much, indeed. You can hardly tell how much; but—"

"Then you're welcome to her," said the farmer.

"To—"

"To my 'Marthy'" beamed Mr. Gregory. "Shall I bring her around here?"

"By no means," said Mr. Corbin hurriedly. "I would much prefer to see her—if you really are in earnest—at the farmhouse."

"Never was more in earnest in my life," said Mr. Gregory, rubbing his hands.

And being a man of few words he went away, leaving Mr. Corbin bewildered beyond expression.

"But this is very strange!" he exclaimed, rising from his chair and pacing up and down the floor. "How they ever surmised that I was partial to to this beautiful young brunette. Ought I to take advantage of her inexperience?"

"Now, Marse Corbin," suggested old Aunt Hester, who, from the window she was cleaning had "taken in" the whole situation, "don't you go flyin' in the face of Provijence. Miss Patty Gregory's as pretty as a pictur' an' as sweet as a peach; an' ef her pa done willin' to gib her to you, jes' tuk her an' be thankful."

"Hester," said the clergyman, "you are a philosopher; and in your remarks I trace the rudiments of good sense."

So he took Hester's advice, and proceeded that very afternoon to the Gregory farm, where Mr. Gregory was painting the door-step, and Patty was thriftily endeavoring to mend a ragged spot in the carpet of the best room.

The farmer greeted him with boisterous delight.

"So you've really come arter my 'Marthy?'" said he. "Well, I am proud."

"I don't know how I shall ever express my gratitude," said the clergyman.

"Don't speak of it," said Mr. Gregory. "Walk in, walk in. Patty, here's the parson."

Mr. Corbin scarcely dared to glance at Miss Gregory; but she smiled and nodded at him with the greatest composure.

"There it is," said Mr. Gregory, pointing his knotty forefinger at the wall, "just as my poor grandmother left it to me, bronze frame and all."

"There is—what?" asked the clergyman.

"My 'Marthy,' to be sure," answered Mr. Gregory in surprise.

"Oh!" said Mr. Corbin, his countenance falling. "I—I thought you meant—I didn't know—"

"Eh!" said Mr. Gregory, "It's my picter of 'Marthy and Mary at Bethany'—a hundred years old, and not to be duplicated, they tell me, this side o' the Atlantic."

"Yes, I've no doubt it's very valuable," said Mr. Corbin. "But not so valuable as—your daughter."

"As—my—daughter!" repeated Mr. Gregory.

"I thought it was this Martha you meant," said the clergyman, gathering courage to advance and get possession of Patty's slim, brown hand. "It certainly was this Martha that I wanted!"

Mr. Gregory glanced from one to the other, lifting his shaggy gray eyebrows, and drew a long breath.

"Well," said he. "If Patty hain't no objection, I hain't! What say you, little gal? Have you a mind to be my donation to the minister, instead o' the old engraving?"

"Oh, father!" said Patty.

"Mr. Corbin," said the farmer, "I don't believe she'll object."

"Oh, father!" once more uttered Patty, hiding her face.

"And you two can talk it over while I go out and finish that there job o' paintin'," added Mr. Gregory.

So he vanished, and the two young people did "talk it over" and very satisfactorily, too.

"But you really thought that father meant me?" said Patty, incredulously.

"I really did," confessed the young man.

"How very strange you must have thought it!" observed Patty.

"I thought it very nice," said Mr. Corbin.

"Do you really—love me?" asked Patty.

"I really do," declared Mr. Corbin.

So they were married within three months; and Miss Prudence Malinda Miles is still an ungathered rose on the deacon's family tree!

A Word to the Housekeeper.

Take it all in all, no article of animal food contributes more largely to the support of life than the ham. From the handy and rapid sandwich to the daintiest of forcemeats, it is in constant demand. Our cockney cousins across the water assure us that of all delicacies none is more highly relished than "a bit o' weal cut with a 'ammy knife," and the flavor of a good ham, we will all admit, is most appetizing. But there are hams and hams, and perhaps the least satisfactory of all the housewife's purchases is a rank, unsavory, ill-cured ham. Now those who know—and they are the large army of those who never buy any other—say that the famous "Ferris" hams are as near perfection as anything can be in this imperfect world. A baked "Ferris" ham for dinner will surely cause a genial smile to float all around the board.

J. A. SHERMAN, HERNIA SPECIALIST, respectfully notifies the public, especially the many who have called at his New York office during his absence, that he has returned from his European office, London, England, where his successful treatment and the marvelous cures resulting from it received the approbation of the most eminent surgeons in Europe.

His fame soon spread, crowding his London office with the victims of Hernia anxious for relief. Patients who had endured long years of suffering came to consult him from India, Russia, Germany, Belgium, France and other countries. The remarkable cures made in London of chronic cases of patients, who had been at the various hospitals and under the care of the most eminent English surgeons without obtaining relief, consulted J. A. Sherman, and were at once relieved and eventually restored to a state of soundness through his method, to the astonishment of the eminent surgeons who had formerly treated them. In the case of Mr. Henry James, who had been a great sufferer for over twenty years, his wonderful and complete cure was certified to by that distinguished surgeon and operator—a rupture at Kings College Hospital, John Wood, F.R.S., F.R.C.S., F.R.C., also Dr. Edward Bellamy, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to Charing Cross Hospital, etc., Sir Henry Thompson, Surgeon at University College, London, and others.

J. A. Sherman's extensive practice in the treatment of Hernia in its various forms with a success unparalleled in all previous ages, is of the highest value to those who are afflicted with rupture and hope to be once more sound. In J. A. Sherman's treatment there is no operation or restriction from labor, while there is relief from the torment and injury of wearing trusses and security from that terrible condition known as strangulated rupture, to which every victim of Hernia is daily subject. All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has no equal as a cough cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kan.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. ## YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest,—it is well expended,—you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

A Dialogue,

Between Lobbin and Sawney, two countrymen who came to Boston to market.

Lobbin—
Good morrow friend; have you bro't down,
For these Lick-pennies here in town,
A sled of Pork, as well as I,
To give away? For none will buy.

Sawney—
The town, I see, is very full
Of meat, which makes the market dull;
But I can't tarry long, not I,
The paltry market here to try,
And so must quickly sell or give;
For at a distance I do live.

Lobbin—
How far, good friend, and what's the name
Of that same town from whence you came?

Sawney—
Our town is situate from here
To the westward seventy miles or near,
(As mile-stones tell the traveler,
Which were set up by private bounty,)
Brookfield by name, in Worcester County.

Lobbin—
And is that distance reason good
Why you don't fetch a bigger load?

Sawney—
A bigger load I did transport,
Tho' not exactly of the sort,
Of these fat hogs within the sled,
For these, you plainly see, are dead;
Whereas the other that I bro't
Left me just now upon the trot.

Lobbin—
Why, what in nature was it, pray,
Was 't a live hog that run away?

Sawney—
It was, my friend ('twixt you and me)
A human creature, such as we.

Lobbin—
Some strolling beggar, I conclude,
Or pocky Bunter fat and rude,
Who, should she try, would be put to 't
To ride a horse, or go a-foot.

Sawney—
No, that it wa'n't, you saucy clown,
The Deputy 'twas of our town;
Foster his name; we call him Squire,
His Christian name is Jedediah.

Lobbin—
This load, I guess, tho' you don't tell it
Is his, and so he came to sell it.

Sawney—
'Twas better business bro't him down,
Than crying Pork along the town;
He came to Court; why, don't you know,
The General Court is sitting now?

Lobbin—
To Court d'you say? bless me, I snore,
I never heard the like before!
Was there no horse fit to ride on,
That he must on a sled be drawn?

Sawney—
He has a horse himself, or mare,
But horse-keeping you know, is dear,
And so he e'en concludes from thence,
To ride a sled and save expense.
And here I guess, (and hope 'tis true)
He had the pub'lic good in view:
For he, I've always understood,
Has ever sought his country's good:
Would never vote a grant too large,
For fear of heightening public charge:
In our late struggles for our rights,
And in the warm and angry fights
Between the Governor and the House,
He's always stuck like body-louse.

Lobbin—
Well, you may try whate'er you can,
To save the credit of the man,
But I declare he is a fool,
Or has a mean contracted soul;
He is, 'tis plain, a saucy Dog,
To ride to Boston on a hog,
And all t' attend the General Court,
Where only gentlemen resort,
And since his ill-timed stinginess
Upon your town has brought disgrace,
Nay, on the Court and country too,
I hope he soon will have his due:
On 's knees be forced to ask their pardon;
A punishment he can't think hard on.

Sawney—
This journey of our Squire to Court,
I fear will make a deal of sport,
For all the way as we came down,
The boys, in almost every town,
Would stare and bawl, "As I'm alive,
There's Brookfield's Representative!"

WHAT "REDDY" DID.

When Charlie Havens left the fifth grade of school at No. 7 he had completed his education, for that spring he went into the mechanical department of a daily newspaper to wash rollers and be the general knock-about of a half-dozen or so superiors. The pressmen didn't like him; they threw paste and waste at him, and made life a burden generally for the red-headed, freckled-faced youngster whom they at once dubbed "Reddy." Mr. Williamson, the foreman, could see no earthly good in the boy, and the rest of the men followed suit, so Charlie had a pretty hard time of it all around. There was no use going to Williamson with his griefs, he would get no sympathy from him, and as for the people in the counting room, they belonged to another world altogether than the one bounded by the windowless walls of the press room.

Twice Charley had found it necessary to pound a couple of the newsboys who had been more than ordinarily impertinent, and as many times the policeman, who was kept in the alley to preserve order among the young Arabs, had arrested him, just out of pure malice, it seemed to Charley. On these occasions the business manager had been notified that one of his "men" was in durance vile, and as many times the business manager had paid his fine, though he had never seen the boy.

The business manager did not come into the press room very often, and when he did, of course the foreman did the honors. He would come over to see how that last car load of paper was running, if the ink that new firm had sent was spreading well, and then, according to what the pressman's convictions or prejudices were, he went back to his office and dictated letters to the parties that they might send another car along, or that the ink last received was all dirt and grit and could not be used, and would be held here in storage until further orders.

One day, however, the business manager stumbled up against Charlie. The business manager was out of humor, which was unfortunate for the boy, for as he first met him, so would the business manager treat him to the end of the chapter.

"Well, what are you doing here?"

"I belong here."

"What do you do?"

"Everything."

Now if the business manager had not been out of temper he would have smiled at the thought of that almost dwarfed object doing everything, but as it was, he frowned.

"What's your name?"

"Charlie Havens."

"Are you the boy that's always fighting?"

"I fight when I have to."

"Well, don't let me hear any more of it. The next time I hear about your fighting I'll discharge you;" and the business manager looked very much in earnest.

Charlie's face was as red as the crop of hair above it, and he only said "Yes, sir," and moved away to some of his duties. He was decidedly awed by this big man, with his hands in his pockets, his immaculate white vest with the slender gold chain of his watch across the fron; the was awed and at the same time he felt rebellious, and as if he was very much put upon. So he was not to be allowed to defend himself at all, he must take the kicks and cuffs; but never mind, when he grew up and became a business manager he would show them how to treat boys who worked hard and tried to do the very best they could.

Things went along pretty well with Charlie for a time, until one night as he was going out of the press room into the dark alley, one of the boys, a bootblack, skulked around the corner, gave his box half a dozen swift swings, and hit Charlie a terrible blow on the back of his head. He felt a peculiar stinging shock, then all was dark, and when he came to himself he was lying on the sofa in the proprietor's private office, and the doctor from the drug store across the street was holding something to his nose which smelt like the stuff his mother put in her dish water. Then he felt that his head was numb, and he remembered what had happened.

The doctor was saying "He'll be all right now. It isn't anything serious. Just an ugly cut." And in a few minutes Charlie could sit up and tell how it happened.

The proprietor was there. "I'll have that boy hunted up and jailed," he said; and that healed Charlie's wound very fast.

Charlie rode home that night in the proprietor's own coupe, with the colored coachman sitting up in front, with a high hat, and a coat which touched the floor when he walked. Charlie was ordered to lay off work for a day or two, but he was in his place in the press room the next morning just the same as ever.

Everything went well until one Sunday morning, when Mr. Williamson, tired and sleepy from being up all night, threw himself down on the bench in the corner of the mailing room, a bundle of papers under his head, and went to sleep. While he was sleeping some one poured a funnelful of press ink down his neck, over the white shirt that he was to wear to early church that morning, spoiling beyond all hope nearly his entire suit of clothes.

On Monday morning a boy from the counting room came over to the press room with the message, "The business manager wants to see Reddy;" and Charlie was marched into the office.

"What is this I hear you have been doing now? Didn't I tell you I'd discharge you if I heard of any more of your performances?"

"I ain't done nothing," was the answer.

"Well, I should say not! Who poured ink all over Mr. Williamson yesterday morning when he was asleep?"

"I don't know."

"Was there anybody there but you?"

"I didn't see anybody."

"Of course you didn't. Now, my boy" (this in a very fatherly tone) "we can't have any one around here forever playing such capers. We want a boy to work, not to play. You have been in mischief ever since you have been here, and I can't stand it any longer."

"What is the matter now?"

It was the cool calm voice of the proprietor, who had heard the business manager's earnest tones, and had opened his door to hear what it was all about.

The business manager explained the situation.

"And did you pour ink on Mr. Williamson?" asked the proprietor.

"No, sir."

Many a crimsoned prisoner at the bar of justice has said "not guilty" in a tone that has carried conviction of innocence; but this innocent boy, with his shifting weak blue eyes, very red hair and embarrassed face, had not one item in his favor.

"You are quite sure?"

"Yes, sir."

The proprietor looked at the business manager, and that look the latter understood. He had seen it before. It meant that the testimony was all in, the district attorney's duty over, and the matter was wholly with the judge.

"You can go back to the press room and go to work. I will look into the matter later;" and so Charlie was dismissed, and the proprietor went back to the crowd of politicians in the private office, and the business manager went on quoting rates to some big advertising firm in Chicago.

So Charlie's life went on. The foreman never forgave the ink affair, and Charlie's lines were harder than ever.

Once in a while the business manager came into the press room, but he never noticed the boy; nobody noticed him; but what did he care for that? Why, he cared so much that one day when he met the proprietor in the alley, and the pleasant-faced and pleasant-voiced man spoke to him and called him "my boy," he went back to his work and tears fell on the inky roller he was washing. There is many a tender heart, many an appreciative and hungry one, behind an ugly face.

A boy working about an engine, if he has any conception or inventiveness about him, will soon learn the principles upon which the machinery runs, and Charlie was naturally bright in this direction. He had dreams of being a master mechanic some day, and he began away down among the primaries, and picked up what he could. It was little, for Mr. Williamson did not allow any one to fool around the press engine, and he had threatened innumerable times to use Charlie's red head to heat the boiler.

One day the big edition of the day had been run, the last "fifty" had been taken from the packer, the men in the mail rooms were wrapping like automatons, and Mr. Williamson and the pressmen had disappeared, as they had a way of doing after a long run.

Charlie was clearing up. He had piled the waste paper into the pit, turned off the gas-lights around the presses, and done the hundred and one little things that made up the sum of his duties. He was just about taking off his greasy ticking apron when he noticed that there was a smell as of something burning. He looked all around, the gas was out, and what a peculiar smell it was! Those who have smelled iron burning may know what it was!

His eyes instinctively went to the water-gauges of the boiler. They were all right, and showed the necessary depth. But while he was still looking there was a sucking sound, and the water went down out of sight like a flash. Could he believe his eyes? What should he do in a case like this? Call somebody? Where is Mr. Williamson? Suppose they should all rush in, and just that minute the boiler explode and kill every one! The big rake stood by the door. He seized it, banged open the door of the furnace, and with a mighty sweep drew the glowing mass of red-white coals out on to the zinc. He never thought of running; he was not the kind of a boy to turn his back on danger. As the coals came piling out, some of them rolled against the apron he wore, which touched the floor as he stooped—an apron soaked with ink and press oil and kerosene. In an instant, and before he had dropped the rake from his fingers, a tiny flame leaped up from the hem unnoticed by the boy; wider it grew and further up it leaped, until in an instant he was enveloped in flame from head to foot. He had presence of mind enough to leap into the tank and turn on the water, but it was too late. A wreath of flame had circled around the neck of his checked shirt; he had drawn a long frightened breath and sucked in the fire.

They found him when they returned lying with his face half in the water, his clothes black and dropping to pieces, soaked with water, one little claw-like hand over the side of the tank as if appealing for help. They lifted him out and laid him on the bench in the mail room; the foreman wrapped his overcoat around him; the doctor from the drug store across the street was summoned. He came, and the business manager came, and the proprietor, and the office generally; and they crowded into the mailing room, all curious.

The foreman saw at a glance how everything had happened—the water gauges empty, the coals raked out in front, the boy with his burned garments. He pointed it out to the business manager and to the proprietor while they waited for the doctor to speak.

There were tears in the proprietor's eyes—tears that he was not ashamed to show—and the business manager's face was very white.

"He is not dead," the doctor said, "but he has evidently swallowed the flame. If so, he cannot live."

They wiped the smoke from his face, and pushed back the red hair from his forehead. Only the ends had been crisped by the licking flame. Several times the thin eyelids slightly moved, once the full under lip moved, and a little sigh was heard, and that was all. The pressmen looked at each other with sad faces. The proprietor spread his handkerchief over the small, quiet face.

As he turned to go he said to the men: "This boy was a brave lad; he came here and worked in order to let his brother go to school. His mother is a widow and poor, and Charlie was willing to give up all hope of a future other than that of a mechanic, for her sake and the sake of a brother. I have known this from the first; I have watched him fight his way; I have seen how he has had to content himself with many things. I have let it go on knowing it would make him stronger for the battle he would have to fight with the world in after years, and as he bore himself, so in like manner did I intend to reward him when the time came that I could help him. He has to-day done me a service that can never be repaid; he has given his life to protect me from loss. There are few who would have done it. It is appreciated."

He said no more; he could not. What more was there to say? A life had been offered and taken, thousands of dollars' worth of property had been saved. The world lost one of the few it cannot afford to spare, but the great wheels go around just the same; the belts and the musical rhythm of the great presses are heard as regularly as if that narrow grave in Forest Lawn had never been.—Harper's Weekly.

NELLIE'S CLEVER RUSE.

The devious ways of young women are once more illustrated in a little tale of a recent happening. A young woman from a neighboring city came to spend a fortnight with a married friend of this town. The hostess had planned a small theater party of four for the night of her guest's arrival, and, as the train was a little late, she hurried her off to her own room at once to "fuss up" while they visited.

"Dick's brother takes you," began Dick's wife. "He is awfully nice, and I do hope you will like each other. I'll tell you everything he likes and doesn't like.

"You're just his style in appearance—dark and petite—and your voice will captivate him, for he adores music; but, Nell, seriously, there is one thing you mustn't do while you're here, and that is, eat onions in any form."

At this Nell groaned and sank back with an exclamation of horror. "I've done that very thing to-night," she cried theatrically; "I dined on the train, you know, and the soup had onions in it; I ate some potato salad flavored with onions, and worse than all, there were some delicious mixed pickles as a relish, which I ate much of by picking out the tender, crisp little onions!"

Then both women looked very solemn.

"It's dreadful, Nell," finally said Mrs. Dick. "Arthur is a perfect crank on the subject; says he thinks nobody should go abroad at all who will eat onions at the risk of making himself disagreeable to all with whom he comes in contact. Oh dear, I ought to have written you!"

But Miss Nell had risen to the emergency.

"Don't worry," she said, confidently; "I see a way out. Let me have a bit of parsley to chew, and I'll manage the rest."

A little later the four were seated in the theater, Arthur and Nell on the best of terms, and nobody but Dick's wife noticing how constantly Nell kept her handkerchief over her mouth.

Presently the young diplomat leaned forward, asking her hostess if she had a vinaigrette with her. "No," was the reply, and then everybody asked her if she felt faint.

"I'm not ill," said Nell, demurely, "but—I hate to speak of it—somebody near me has been eating onions, and their flavor is peculiarly disagreeable to me."

Arthur swallowed the bait way up to the float. "Let me change places with you, Miss B—," he said earnestly. "I haven't noticed onions in my vicinity, and I shan't mind it as you do, though I understand and sympathize with your dislike.

"It is atrocious that people have so little regard for the actual rights of other people. There should be an ordinance preventing onion eaters from coming to public places."

Nell prettily deprecated, but finally reluctantly changed places, and, having thus completely and literally thrown him off the scent, continued to increase the favorable impression she had evidently made.

"Oh, you clever girl," said Mrs. Dick, when at the end of the evening she went in to say good night. "Arthur is completely hoodwinked; he told Dick down stairs just now that you were delightful, and he liked you better than ever when he found you were with him on the onion question."

And Nell smiled wickedly, but said her prayers and slept the sleep of the just without a tinge of remorse.—New York Times.

LIGE JACKSON'S WIFE'S HUSBAND.

One day in my missionary work in the Cumberland mountains I rode up to a much better looking house and hillside farm than was customary in that section.

"Good morning," I said to a tall, thin man working in a patch between the house and road.

"How d'y?" he responded.

"Very nice place you have here?" I remarked.

"Right peart," he returned.

"Can I see the man of the house?" I inquired.

"Thar ain't none."

"No? Does a widow own the place?"

"No. A married woman."

"Who is she?"

"Lige Jackson's wife."

"And there is no man of the house?"

"That's what I said."

"Well, can I see Mrs. Jackson then?"

"No. She's gone down to the store to sell some truck."

"When will she be back?"

"Ain't no tellin'. She does purty much ez she pleases 'round here."

"Mr Jackson doesn't cut much of a figure, does he?" I laughed.

"Not much."

"Are you working for him?"

"Course not; fer her."

"Who are you?" I ventured, for I was bound to see somebody who could give me the information I sought.

The man smiled a little.

"Oh," he said, "I ain't nobody much. I'm only Lige Jackson's wife's husband."—Detroit Free Press.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

SOME PECULIAR WOMEN.

In this Columbian year our thoughts dwell with noble emotions upon the patience, the endurance and the love of "that innumerable company" of women who braved the dangers of an angry sea and faced the terrors of a savage land to make their biographies in the homes of the wilderness and to leave their names as a heritage of a great nation. The age of discovery, of exploration and of occupation has not yet ended. There are women to-day no less heroic than those of the Columbian era. There are women of our time as brave as were their remote female ancestors.

Even the weakest woman can comprehend how a worthy wife of such a man as Lieutenant Peary could leave the comforts of a civilized home for love's sake, and follow her husband to the ends of the earth. But, leaving out the consideration of marital devotion, the strongest woman might well draw back from the known and unknown dangers few hardy seafaring men are ready to encounter.

During the past month Lieutenant Peary has been giving in Boston and vicinity, his lecture descriptive of his recent Arctic expedition. The lecture is illustrated by stereopticon views made from photographs he took upon the journey, and Mrs. Peary's figure appears in group after group. She accompanied her husband and his party to his camp in McCormick Bay a year ago last summer; went with them upon their explorations during the following autumn; wintered in Red Cliff House, farther north than any white woman has ever been known to go; accompanied the explorers again on their spring expeditions, and spent the summer in the camp while Lieutenant Peary with Dr. Astrup and their dogs made the overland trip that will ever give honor to his name.

At the lecture, we see Mrs. Peary, first at Godhavn, Greenland, in a view which is called "The Reception Committee and One of the Received"—a group of Danish women and children with Mrs. Peary. The Danish women are short and dark; they are dressed in fur pants and cloth blouses, and wear high fur boots and cloth turbans. Mrs. Peary is tall and slender; she wears a long, close-fitting outside garment and a simple hat. Later she is shown in her Eskimo costume.

North of Upernavik there are no white people; and in the autumn of a year ago, entire families of Eskimos came to visit Red Cliff camp from distances of 20, 30, even 100 miles, bringing with them all their earthly possessions. Several of these family groups are shown; one of the pictures represents in the company an old grandmother packed upon a sledge with the fur skins of their tent, and a young mother in the rear, trudging through the snow with her baby peeping over her shoulder from the hood upon her back.

"They came to see the circus," said the lecturer; "they staid two or three days to see it, and went away satisfied." And the greatest curiosity of all, to their eyes, was the white woman! One Eskimo woman in a village group is convulsed with laughter. You can see the wave of irresistible mirth to the tips of her chubby fingers and the toes of her deer-skin boots. She is laughing at the sight of a white woman.

There is one view of the whale boat containing the expedition as it entered a school of some 200 walruses. A battle followed, but the adventurers were too busy to take pictures. Four rifles were in constant use, while Mrs. Peary rapidly loaded the fifth.

The Second Farmers' Institute

Was held at the court room Tuesday of this week. The speaker was George Cruickshanks of Fitchburg, and his subject in the morning was "Small Fruits." He gave a list of the most desirable kinds to cultivate, and the method of treatment. He said every farmer especially owed it to himself and family to raise all the small fruits needed for home use, when it could be done at such small expense. Strawberries, raspberries, currants, etc., required good fertilization, as did also grapes. The latter should not be allowed to run wild, but should be trained to trellis, and cut back closely soon after the falling of the leaves if possible, and during the growing season the new tendrils should not be allowed to grow beyond prescribed limits. Ground bone and potash or wood ashes should be given liberally for the benefit of the grape vine. In the raising of plums he said the trees should be kept in vigorous growth, and as soon as the black knot appeared it should be pared off and treated to an application of turpentine and whale oil soap, which would eradicate the disease.

In the afternoon the speaker gave a talk on "House Plants, and the Method of Treating Them." The soil should be a mixture of well-rotted barn manure, rotted sods, and a small portion of sand, with perhaps an addition of well-decayed leaf mould, all well mixed. In the bottom of the pot should be placed a few broken pieces of crock, and over them a little moss to prevent the escape of soil; this is for good drainage. The pot should not be too large for the plant, and when it is potted the earth should be packed firmly around the roots with the fingers. The plant should be watered thoroughly whenever it is done, so that the water will pass entirely through the pot into the saucer. Some plants need all the sun they can get, others require partial shade; their nature should be studied and their needs consulted in order to be successful in their cultivation. Mr. Cruickshanks is a practical man and thoroughly understands his subject. He was plied with questions right and left, and was always ready with a well-defined answer. The meeting was an interesting one, and well appreciated by the full number of ladies and gentlemen present. The Board of Agriculture is doing good service when it sends out such men as Mr. Cruickshanks to tell people useful things which he has tested and knows to be reliable, rather than speculations which may prove misleading.

Sudden Death.

Timothy McCarty of Springfield, about 45, one of the gang engaged in loading sleepers on a Boston and Albany train at Blanchardville, died suddenly while at work about 2.30 yesterday afternoon. He was on top of a pile of sleepers helping put them in a car, when without warning he fell to the ground. His companions helped him up and to walk to a pile of sleepers about six feet away, where he put his hand to his head and leaned against the timbers, but gradually sank into a heap and expired before he could be got into the car. The body was brought to this station and viewed by Medical Examiner Holbrook, who decided that death was the result of heart trouble, and gave permission for the removal of the body to Springfield. He had shown no signs of illness, and only a few moments before his death had finished a hearty dinner.

THE LATE CHARLES H. MERRICK OF MONSON.

Charles H. Merrick, the youngest son of Gideon and Beulah Merrick was born in Monson April 11, 1812. In early boyhood he remained on the farm, yet pursuing his studies, and after he had taught for several terms refused a college education and chose a position of master-weaver (which position he had fitted himself for) in a woolen mill at Wales, and thus early in life devoted himself to mechanical pursuits, which was his great desire. When the mill at Wales was burned Mr. Merrick assumed charge of the weaving department in a mill at Rockville, Ct., known as the "old Rock," and while there he invented and applied to his looms a self-acting temple, also a combination of pulleys for operating a six-harness web. In 1838 the mill closed and Mr. Merrick was thrown out of employment. At this time he entertained the plan of manufacturing palm-leaf hoods, which business at this time was in its infancy. On his way to Monson he passed through Somers, Ct., where palm leaf was prepared for braiding, and having purchased eight pounds of weaving and two of braiding leaf, he proceeded to Monson and at once commenced to make palm-leaf sheets, locating at North Monson. He was forced to make his own looms without any pattern or design, and later on he devised the shapes to make and blocks to finish the hoods. Thus through his own efforts entirely Mr. Merrick made the first palm-leaf hood in Massachusetts, and started a new enterprise in Monson. The business rapidly increased, and in the summer of 1838 Mr. Merrick formed the firm of Merrick & Fay, taking for his partner Rufus F. Fay. By this alliance a great advance was made in the production and sale of hoods. Late in the autumn of 1838 they sold their interest to Messrs. Lyon & Norcross, with the understanding that the latter should manufacture hoods for them at stipulated price. They then removed their head quarters from North Monson to the central village, and carried on their business. Sept. 8, 1841, the firm bought some real estate, consisting of a tract of land on Main street in the central part of the town, with a 25 by 30 two-story building, which was arranged for the manufacture of ladies' hats and bonnets from foreign and domestic straw braids. At this period of the straw business but little was known of the process of making braid goods, so the firm, by the payment of $200, obtained permission to gather what information concerning the manufacture of the same they were able to by observation in the factory of another. By this information and the already acquired knowledge of the firm, they readily supplied themselves with the necessary tools and fixtures for the successful finishing of braid goods. The superiority of their tools was so much that the party who first instructed them in the manufacture immediately ordered a duplicate set of the machines for their own use at a cost of $400. The firm thus commenced the manufacture of straw-braid goods in a very small way in 1841. But gradually their business increased, and as they had always made the choicest goods, the demand for them soon called for a new factory, which was built in 1856 and occupied the following winter. In 1858 the firm was again reorganized and Henry Hodges of Foxboro and J. T. D. Hersey of East Bridgewater were admitted as equal partners. The new firm thus organized was known as Merrick, Fay & Co. at the manufactory in Monson, and Hodges, Hersey & Co. in the salesroom at New York. The firm at once made arrangements to largely increase their production, embracing all kinds and classes of ladies' straw goods, and continued the then only known system of hand manufacture until 1861. In that year the first power press was invented and applied to the complete finishing of a hat or bonnet at one operation in a metal die the exact size and shape of the article to be produced, perfecting and duplicating each piece in every successive operation. Many improvements have been made in hat pressing machines since the invention of 1861, the first being operated by hand, and deriving their power from the application of the screw and cam principle, while the later inventions gave a machine capable of applying a pressure of 1000 pounds to each square inch of goods, the power being furnished by hydraulic action and easily directed and applied to any desired pressure, with the capacity of rapidly repeating its operation. In 1863 a complete revolution in the method of sewing straw braids began to take form and effect from the invention and use of the Bosworth braid sewing machine, which developed the process of producing the perfect form of hand stitch by a power-machine, with a great increase in production and in nicety of execution, so that machine-sewed braids secured largely advanced prices over hand-sewed goods. This opportunity for new business induced the firm in 1868 to build a large addition to their factory for the purpose of introducing the manufacture of mens' and boy's hats, which were successfully manufactured in that year, and ever since. While the company's introduction of sewing and finishing machines enabled them to produce more than ten times the number of goods they could by hand, yet the statement is true that for the past 25 years one-third of the families in Monson have been furnished employment by the straw industry, besides giving work to many out of town. From a small building of 15 feet square in 1838, the works now occupy a flooring of 50,000 square feet, with each department crowded.

In addition to his business life, Mr. Merrick has been prominently connected with all matters of the highest interest to the town. He was chosen a director of the Monson National Bank in 1855 and 1862. He was also a trustee of Monson Academy. At the organization of the Monson Savings Bank he was chosen president, which position he held till Sept. 29, 1884. Mr. Merrick died last Friday evening from a paralytic shock, after a short illness. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon, Rev. F. S. Hatch officiating, and the interment was in the Center cemetery. He leaves one son, Charles, who has a music store on Main street.

The Western Massachusetts conference of the Young People's Universalist Union will be held in the Universalist church next Tuesday afternoon and evening. Young people are expected from the societies in Spencer, Warren, Monson, Springfield and Westfield. Essays will be read and discussed as regards the various phases of the work of this Christian movement. Miss Mary Moulton of Boston, the state secretary of the union, will be present and address the conference on "Home Missionary Work." The afternoon session will begin at 2 o'clock, and the evening at 7.

Ellen Anderson was before the district court Monday for drunkenness, and was placed on probation. Tuesday John R. Graham was probated for the same offense. He was found in the lower hall of the Nassowanno House the night before so far gone that it took three men to carry him bodily to the lockup. His watch chain was dangling from his vest, and when he came to himself in the morning he claimed that he had been robbed of a $35 watch. Two men are alleged to have placed him where he was found, but the person who claims to have seen them refuses to give their names.

The Boston and Albany road ought to do something to improve the condition of the Commercial street entrance to the station during wet weather. The water from the track east of the bridge flows down over the sidewalk in torrents, while the bridge leaks badly, making it decidedly disagreeable for pedestrians, as the water continues to drip long after the rain has ceased, while when there is snow on the ground it may be good going in almost any other place but there, where umbrellas and rubbers are needed to get along without getting wet. Men are now at work putting an apron over the walk.

C. F. Grosvenor has had a continual fight with the ice at his mill for five weeks, the canal freezing almost solid, making it difficult to get water for the wheels. The high water of last Friday brought quantities of heavy ice, some of it 28 inches thick and the most of it at least 20 inches, down the river and formed a jam a short distance above the mill, turning the water over the flat and into the basement of the mill, where it was about three feet deep. After the flood had subsided the ice jam in the river was blown up with dynamite Saturday afternoon, men from the Flynt quarry at Monson doing the work.

Overseer of the Poor Merriam does not get imposed upon very often, but thinks he met his match last week. Wednesday forenoon there appeared before him a man and woman with nine children. The man did not claim that all of them were his; part belonged to a dead brother, and he was caring for them. The man said he had started from St. Louis for Boston, but that at Pittsfield his money had given out and from there he had been helped to Palmer by the railroad men. Mr. Merriam did not like the looks of the fellow and questioned him sharply, especially regarding the state of his finances, but he strenuously denied having any money, so the whole crowd was given dinner at the Converse House and their fares paid to Worcester. It afterward turned out that they had stayed Tuesday night at the almshouse in Springfield and been started toward Boston in the morning. They were next heard from in Worcester, where they wanted to go to Providence, being helped along by the authorities, one of the children being left on the street in the hurry to get to the train. After a little study of the question Mr. Merriam is positive that the man and woman, with some of the children, were here about four years ago, when they were on their way from Providence to St. Louis, the man, by his plausible story of having lost all his money since starting, managing to collect about $20 from kind-hearted citizens. He has written to the authorities in Providence, and hopes to find trace of them.

Rev. H. F. Moulton delivered his third theological lecture in the lecture room of St. Paul's last evening, in the presence of the largest number of people which has thus far attended any one of the course. His subject was "Universalism, Its Doctrine of Christ." Mr. Moulton began by saying that many ask us, as Jesus asked the Pharisees, "What think ye of Christ?" We reply: I.—The Universalist doctrine of Christ denies the doctrine of the trinity, or that Christ is equal with God. The history of this view was referred to, and its defects in being bad psychology, opposed to unity of nature, and unbiblical, were pointed out. II.—The Universalist doctrine of Christ denies the doctrine of extreme humanitarianism, or that Christ is merely a good man. The reason why this view had grown up was shown, and that it was not biblical, nor in accordance with the most scholarly theological thought. III.—The Universalist doctrine of Christ affirms, (a) the divinity of His nature; that He was created in the likeness of God. Also (b) the divinity of His character, that He had by far the best development, in degree, of spiritual wisdom, righteousness and love of any one known to history. III.—The Universalist doctrine of Christ believes in the divinity of His mission. (a) He was a divine spiritual truth-speaker. He taught us of the love of God, the worth of man, the greatness of duty, and final holiness of our souls. "For this I came into the world, that I might bear witness unto the truth." (b) He is the divine saviour of the world, not from punishment justly due for sins committed, but sin itself. "I came not to judge the world, but to save the world." (c) He is the divine life given to the hearts of men. He imparts the life of faith, hope, love. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Surely this doctrine of Christ is scientific, biblical, reasonable, Christian and livable. Universalists ought to revere it, love it, teach it and live it, for the sake of Christ, their own souls, and the world. The subject of the lecture for next Thursday evening will be "Universalism, Its Doctrine of Man."

There were present from out of town Miss Nellie Sherbrooks of Worcester, Miss Blanche Lyman of Palmer and Master Freddie Jenks of Amherst.

Miss Nellie Carmody, daughter of John Carmody, died last Saturday after a week's illness with rheumatic fever. This makes two deaths in a family of 14 children, a son having died a few years ago. The sudden death of this young lady is a terrible blow to her father and mother, and they have the sympathy of all in their affliction.

The third lecture in the course will be next Thursday evening, by C. P. Nelson of Ware, who will describe the "Libby Prison Tunnel." All ought to hear this intensely interesting story. Last Friday evening the Young Men's Debating Club had a public debate. Quite a number were present, and unusual interest was shown by every one in the assembly. The question was: "Resolved, that the high license system is for the best interests of the town of Palmer the coming year." Harry Newell and colleague took the affirmative, and F. A. Upham the negative. A. W. Warriner was elected chairman for the evening, and was authorized to appoint judges. He accordingly chose H. N. Cross, principal of the school, Mr. Twiss and Mrs. F. A. Ruggles. The affirmative side took the ground that it is unjust to try to prohibit the use of liquor because some abuse their sumptuary privileges; and also that no prohibitory law can be enforced, which by implication means that laws are liable to be violated, eventually producing more evil than intemperance. The negative side then dealt with the moral and financial features of the question, and produced some strong statistics in defense of their position. The arguments lasted about 90 minutes, and the question was to be decided strictly on their merits. After the judges had spent about ten minutes in private they announced that the affirmative side had maintained their position the most forcefully. The house also justified their decision by an almost unanimous vote.

The doctor has been practicing here for nearly three years with good results, and his friends wish him every success in his new field.

All persons interested in the moral condition of the village gladly welcomed the change in the business center which brought about the closing of the stores last Sabbath. It is hoped the apparent influence of such a step will be the means of arousing public sentiment to such a degree that every place will be one of rest and quietude on the Lord's day. It is a disgrace to the village for any one to be able to count twenty or more teams tied along Commercial street on Sunday. If it were for a funeral it might be well excused, but such an array is not there for such a purpose, unless it be to show that all the better life of many is being buried under lawlessness and sin. A good beginning has been made by the better portion of the citizens to remedy this evil. Let it continue, and each do his part.

The performance of the amateur Tuxedo Minstrels last Friday night was an unusually good one, and was well attended in spite of the stormy weather, many coming from surrounding towns. The songs by Miss Lizzie O'Connor, Miss Mary Kelliher and Miss Lizzie McAuliffe were well rendered and enthusiastically received, each being encored. The work of the end men, Ronan and Lyons, was good, and Ben Chadwick entertained the audience in a clever manner. The afterpiece was well rendered, taking into account the fact that at the last moment it was found the music which was expected had not been prepared, and the parts had to be sung without an accompaniment. The contortion act of Anthony Fountain was very good, and the dancing of Benway seemed to please the audience. After the performance there was a dance, for which the Palmer Orchestral Club furnished good music.

WARE'S NEW HIGH SCHOOL BUILDING.

The new high school building for Ware is assured by a vote at the town meeting last evening of 199 in favor to 27 against the borrowing of a sum of money not to exceed $40,000 for the erection of a building on the lot recently purchased by the town of W. C. Eaton and others. The cut, which we present by the courtesy of A. J. Davis, gives a good representation of the building as it will appear when done. The length is 100 feet, depth 80 feet, height from grade to eaves in front 40 feet. The building is to be of brick, with trimmings and ornaments of gray Ohio freestone. The basement in front is to be of Monson granite in broken ashler. The inside finish throughout is to be of ash, and to be piped for gas and wired for electric lights.

In the basement are two play rooms each 48 by 36 feet, the heating apparatus, sanitaries each 24 by 16 feet, with ample corridors. The first floor has the class room 37 by 62 feet, to accommodate 160 pupils, walls 14 feet high; two recitation rooms 28½ by 26½, with principal's office 11 by 16; teachers' room 11 by 12; book shelves, vestibules and corridors. The second floor has an assembly hall or lecture room 37 by 62 feet, two recitation rooms to accommodate 40 pupils each, a chemical laboratory, private experimenting room with dark room, and library. All the details of ventilation and heating have been carefully looked after, and a model building is expected, one which will be sufficiently commodious to accommodate the town for many years to come. The committee elected to have full power to build is composed of H. C. Davis, Dr. D. M. Ryan, J. W. Cummings, Rev. James Boyle, W. H. Hall, W. S. Hyde, C. E. Stevens.

Orin Nickerson, an employe at the pump works, died Sunday morning of pneumonia. The funeral was held from his late residence on Washburn avenue Wednesday at 12 o'clock, the body being taken to Chicopee for burial. He was a member of the Chicopee lodge of Masons, and St. John's lodge of Odd Fellows of Springfield.

WARE.

F. Bombard has gone to Canada for a lot of horses for his spring trade.

Dr. and Mrs. D. M. Ryan are being congratulated on the recent birth of a daughter.

The meetings this week at the chapel were conducted by the pastor, as help from abroad could not be obtained as was expected.

Charles E. Ballard, for more than 30 years employed by the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. in charge of repairs, has resigned the position.

Brig. Gen. Simon G. Griffin of Keene, N. H., will deliver the Memorial Day address for the J. W. Lawton Post, G. A. R., this year.

The new office at the Mansion House is a model of elegance, neatness and convenience, unequaled by any house in this part of the country.

The weavers of the Geo. H. Gilbert Mfg. Co. who struck are still out, with no prospect of a return, and some are seeking work elsewhere.

After paying all their bills, the Ware Young Men's Social Club has disbanded with the satisfaction of eclipsing all others in the way of a grand ball.

It is reported that the temperance people are organizing preparatory for town meeting. There is need enough for earnest temperance work in Ware the year round.

The new store is being put in readiness for D. Robertson & Co. as fast as possible. The new large show windows are in, and the hot water heating apparatus arrived Wednesday.

The athletic exhibition of the Young Men's Union on Monday evening was an enjoyable affair, witnessed by about 400 invited guests. Ninety couples participated in the dance which followed the entertainment.

The Ware Rod and Gun Club has engaged the services of Forester Barnes of Hardwick as janitor for the club house the coming season. The work of building the addition to the house is delayed by the serious illness of Frank W. Harwood, who had the contract.

Mrs. Henry A. Allen died very suddenly Sunday morning at the age of 33. She was a loving wife and mother, and was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She leaves a husband and three daughters. The funeral was on Tuesday, conducted by Revs. B. V. Stevenson and V. E. Southworth.

Albert Mitchell, who was arrested by Chief Fitzgerald upon his release from the Fitchburg jail last Saturday, where he had just served a sentence of sixty days, turned out to be a Ware citizen by the name of Hormidas Renaud. He was taken to Northampton, where he will remain until he appears at the district court on the charge of larceny.

John Dexter was given a surprise which was a surprise indeed on Tuesday evening of this week by some of the girls employed in the same room with him in the mill. They came trooping in bringing with them an elegant easy chair, that he may rest from the toils of the day in his declining years. Mr. Dexter came here from England when the Otis Company commenced to make hosiery goods, nearly 25 years ago, and has always had the respect of all who knew him.

The Woman's Relief Corps will net a neat sum from its entertainment on Tuesday evening. About 40 of the corps and their friends took part. The principal attraction was "The Temple of Fame," which was a contest by a large number of characters for a laurel wreath to be bestowed on the one who had done most to merit the praise of humanity. After due consideration Mother Goose received the crown. "Prof. Baxter's Invention, or Old Maids Made New," was a laughable affair, and showed good acting.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 15, 1893.

Thursday afternoon the Fast Day question was finally settled for this year by the refusal of the House to reconsider the defeat of the bill to abolish the day. After they had done this, as it would not have been expected to have two holidays near each other in April, the House reconsidered its vote to make April 19 a legal holiday and killed the bill by a large majority. So matters stand just as they have been, and there is a year in which the Fast Day abolitionists can agitate the matter.

The unanimous confirmation of Samuel O. Lamb of Greenfield as savings bank commissioner by the council Thursday afternoon is said to have been preceded by a further effort of Gov. Russell to secure the nomination of Mr. Sayles, who had been previously rejected. But none of the council acted upon his hint that he would withdraw Lamb and renominate Sayles, if desired, and so Lamb was confirmed.

It is practically settled that there will be no 100-days' limit to the session.

More life is apparent this year in the move for biennial state elections than was shown last year. Petitions for the change have been presented with the names of Henry L. Pierce, J. Q. A. Brackett, George S. Hale, Samuel Bowles, Archibald M. Howe and others of high standing in the state. Thus far no written remonstrance has been made, but the labor organizations pretty much as a whole are against the plan, and for two years they have been numerously represented at the committee hearings.

The old conflict over taxation matters has been renewed already on both sides. On one hand is the effort to exempt municipal bonds from taxation, and on the other a move to renew the old doomage bill, to get at the names of holders of foreign stocks so they can be taxed, and to defeat the proposed municipal bond exemption. The state Grange is officially represented by ex-Senator Stockwell, and most of the farmers seem to be arrayed against the city people.

With short debate and little favor the House killed the bill to abolish days of grace on business paper.

The encounter over the abolition of the executive council was wholly of a partisan nature, and it was evident from the outset to the experienced eye that the speakers were talking to the outside public more than to the members who heard them. It was amusing to see the way in which Mr. Charles of Boston, who led the Democratic minority of the committee on constitutional amendments, nominally deprecated the introduction of politics into the debate and yet did himself the thing he hoped would not be done. It looked, too, as if he made a political issue intentionally, for he said that the Democratic party had determined to make a stand as a party for the abolition of the council. Very likely this will be the main issue upon which the Democrats will go to the state in the fall, and hence every move which they make now is of importance.

But the question was not really debated much below the surface. The Democrats protested against limiting the power of the governor by "a lot of assistant governors"; they criticized the council as a place for shelving antiquated politicians, and they made a small point on the expense. Most of all they relied on Republican support, and quoted Charles Sumner, Henry Wilson and John D. Long on their side. They went back and cited Daniel Webster and Marcus Morton also. The Republicans spoke only briefly. Mr. Bliss of Boston turned nearly the argument from Long by saying that the Republican party did not follow his recommendation. But the main point of the Republicans, made especially by Mr. Bennett of Everett, was that the Democrats in their proposition had no confirming power at all for the governor's appointments. As the party lines were drawn strictly, the Democrats will resolve to abolish the council was defeated by 63 to 132, on party lines, except that Messrs. Farley of Orange and Brown of Fall River, Republican and Independent Republican respectively, voted with the Democrats.

A movement seems to have been organized in different parts of the state to give school committees power to select land for school buildings, to make the contracts, supervise the erection, to have the care of the buildings when finished and to have the employment and oversight of the janitors and other employes. Petitions for these powers have come in from widely different points.

Wednesday afternoon the Senate reached the House resolutions in favor of the annexation of the Sandwich Islands and, without a word of debate, refused to concur in admitting them. It is the feeling among the conservative members that whether annexation is desirable or not, the government at Washington understands the case much better than the Massachusetts Legislature, and that it would be running before they were sent if they should volunteer to give the government their opinion.

Wednesday afternoon also the woman suffrage committee reported its bill for municipal suffrage for women. The division in the committee was on straight party lines, all the Republicans in favor of the bill and all the Democrats against it. This is an unusual fact, for the question of party has never come into the issue before to any appreciable extent, and there seems to be no reason for an exception this year.

An adverse report has been made by the insurance committee on the scheme to insure salaries to clerks who happen to be thrown out of employment. LANDON.

NEWS MATTERS IN GENERAL.

The trial of Huge O'Donnell for murder at Homestead was begun Monday.

Brookfield is excited over the discovery of coal at a depth of 30 feet, accompanied by indications of petroleum.

The Commercial Endowment Association of Northampton has assigned for the benefit of the certificate-holders.

President Harrison sent a message to the Senate Wednesday afternoon recommending the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States.

A slab of marble 60 feet long and 20 feet thick fell without warning in the quarry at West Rutland, Vt., last Saturday, killing five men instantly.

William E. Gladstone introduced the long-expected bill for the home rule of Ireland in the British House of Commons Monday, making a strong speech in favor of it.

Strenuous efforts are being made to save the neck of Coy, the Berkshire murderer, on the ground that one of the jury is said to have expressed an opinion on the case before the trial.

Mr. Cleveland officially announces five members of his cabinet, Walter Q. Gresham of Illinois, secretary of state; John G. Carlisle of Kentucky, secretary of the treasury; Daniel S. Lamont of New York, secretary of war; Wilson S. Bissel of Buffalo, postmaster general; Hoke Smith of North Carolina, secretary of the interior.

A West Springfield man began to make preparation Tuesday for another marriage before his dead wife had been buried, and applied for a marriage license, but when told the sentiment of the community concluded to wait a few days. The intended bride had been a widow only two weeks, and was to be the man's third wife.

A triple alliance between America, Russia and France has been ratified by the United States Senate, in which the United States gets the support, if needed, of these two countries against any other European power, while Russia gets extradition for persons charged with attempts to assassinate the czar or any member of the royal family, either by deed or conspiracy.

There were lively times in the Kansas Legislature Wednesday. The House is pretty evenly divided between the Republicans and Populists, the former having had possession of the hall in the forenoon and the latter in the afternoon, but Wednesday morning the Populists took possession, barricaded the doors and proposed to keep the Republicans out, but they battered their way in with sledge hammers. The troops were ordered out, but refused to obey the commands of the Populist governor, while the business men flocked to the aid of the sheriff, who was assisting the Republicans to maintain their position. The Populists finally gave up the fight.

Fail to Do Their Duty.

Everybody has at times failed to do their duty towards themselves. Hundreds of lady readers suffer from sick headache, nervousness, sleeplessness and female troubles. Let them follow the example of Mrs. H. Herbechter, Stevens Point, Wis., who for five years suffered greatly from nervous prostration and sleeplessness, tried physicians and different medicines without success. But one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine caused sound sleep every night, and she is feeling like a new person. Mrs. Elizabeth Wheeler, Laramie City, Wyoming, who tried all other remedies, declares that after three weeks' use of the Nervine for headache, nervous prostration, etc., she was entirely relieved. Sold by LeGro & Lynde. Trial bottle free. 52-17

Fell Dead.

These words are very familiar to our readers, as not a day passes without the report of the sudden death of some prominent citizen. The explanation is "heart disease." Therefore beware if you have any of the following symptoms: Short breath, pain in side, smothering spells, swollen ankles, asthmatic breathing, weak and hungry spells, tenderness in shoulder or arm, fluttering of heart or irregular pulse. These symptoms mean heart disease. The most reliable remedy is Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, which has saved thousands of lives. Book of testimonials free at LeGro & Lynde's, who also sell the New Heart Cure. 52-17

Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills

Act on a new principle—regulating the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new discovery. Dr. Miles' Pills speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles, constipation. Unequaled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! 50 doses 25 cents. Samples free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 52-17

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

There is no claim made for Ayer's Sarsaparilla which cannot be endorsed by scores of testimonials. This fact plainly proves that the blood is the source of most disorders and that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best of blood purifiers. Try it this month.

Premature baldness may be prevented and the hair made to grow on heads already bald by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Don't waste time, money and health trying every new medicine you may see advertised in the papers. If the cause of your trouble is in the blood, liver, stomach or kidneys, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla at once, and be sure of a cure. Take no other.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Didn't Want a Girl.

Last summer my wife's health was all run down and she wanted me to hire a girl to do the work. In a little while I found one I thought would suit her, when to my surprise she said I need not hire any one, as she felt much better, and thought another bottle of Sulphur Bitters would cure her.

DONALD GREY, 41 Worcester square, Boston.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Could Not Keep

Shop without them. I consider your Sulphur Bitters a remarkable blood purifier. I know of several people, whose cases were considered hopeless, that have been entirely cured by your medicine. The sale of Sulphur Bitters is so large here that I could not keep shop without them. E. S. YATES, Pharmacist, 99 Essex street, Lawrence, Mass.

Is FASHIONS a paper that women in general want? is it what women of taste and culture want? does it thrust the state of your culture into your thoughts as you turn its pages?

Why discuss in the papers a question of fact? FASHIONS speaks for itself. The February number is a fair sample.

RUPTURE.

J. A. SHERMAN, HERNIA SPECIALIST, respectfully notifies the public, especially the many who have called at his New York office during his absence, that he has returned from his European office, London, England, where his successful treatment and the marvelous cures resulting from it received the approbation of the most eminent surgeons in Europe.

His fame soon spread, crowding his London office with the victims of Hernia anxious for relief. Patients who had endured long years of suffering came to consult him from India, Russia, Germany, Belgium, France and other countries. The remarkable cures made in London of chronic cases of patients, who had been at the various hospitals and under the care of the most eminent English surgeons without obtaining relief, consulted J. A. Sherman, and were at once relieved and eventually restored to a state of soundness through his method, to the astonishment of the eminent surgeons who had formerly treated them. In the case of Mr. Henry James, who had been a great sufferer for over twenty years, his wonderful and complete cure was certified to by that distinguished surgeon and operator on rupture at Kings College Hospital, John Wood, F.R.S., F.R.C.S., F.R.C.S. also Dr. Edward Bellamy, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to Charing Cross Hospital, etc., Sir Henry Thompson, Surgeon at University College, London, and others.

J. A. Sherman's extensive practice in the treatment of Hernia in its various forms with a success unparalleled in all previous ages, is of the highest value to those who are afflicted with rupture and hope to be once more sound. In J. A. Sherman's treatment there is no operation or restriction from labor, while there is relief from the torment and injury of wearing trusses and security from that terrible condition known as strangulated rupture, to which every victim of Hernia is daily subject. His book of information and indisputable proofs is mailed to those who send 10 cents. His book of photographic likeness, showing the condition of patients before and after treatment and cure, is sent by express on receipt of 25 cents. Call on or address

A Dude's a Dude.

Young Bobby Burns when he began
To preach and prate and a' that
About the homage due to man,
His high estate and a' that,
Had never known there lived a thing,
Ne'er understood at a' that;
For if he did he'd surely sing:
"A dude's a dude for a' that."
For a' that and a' that,
Their lack of brains and a' that;
Let humor tease, they strive to please,
A dude's a dude for a' that.

You see yon peacock called a man,
With one eye-glass and a' that,
Constructed on some unknown plan,
He's but an ass for a' that.
He knows his name, but spells it wrong,
For sake of style and a' that,
And wears his hair and trousers loag,
A smile to set off a' that.
For a' that and a' that,
His hobbling gait and a' that;
His toothpick shoes give one the blues,
He's still a dude for a' that.

A man can live on scant reserve,
I've heard it said, and a' that,
But the dude exists on common nerve,
Holds up his head for a' that,
He wears the latest English styles,
Big checks, odd ties, and a' that,
So loud, you'd hear them many miles,
He scorn defies for a' that.
For a' that and for a' that,
He is "Ah" "Bah Jove!" and a' that,
Remorseless fate may change his pate,
But a dude's a dude for a' that.

Swell germans would be really stale,
The ladies pout and a' that,
The dainty figures sure to fail,
Were dudes left out of a' that;
The "fawncy dawnce" would lose its charm,
Fall somewhat flat and a' that;
All criticism they disarm,
The dude is pat on a' that.
On a' that, on a' that,
The waltz, gavotte and a' that.
He steers the girl thro' the whirl,
The dude's a brick for a' that.

Great Darwin loved the monkey's shape,
Such stuff he wooed and a' that;
But when he dubbed man as an ape,
He meant the dude for a' that;
To make a "monk" the dudelet lacks,
(And I'll go bail for a' that),
A little hair, a little wax,
Then add the tail to a' that
To a' that, to a' that,
Stick on the tail to a' that,
An "ori-gan" gran', an "It tal-yan,"
Behold your dude in a' that.

THE BEST TEST OF THE QUALITY OF PAINT is exposure to the weather. Winter snows and Summer suns will prove its value or lack of it. Poor paint loses its brilliancy and peels off under the sun's scorching rays. When you apply paint to be durable and always smooth and glossy, see that you get the Chilton brands. They are manufactured in the most careful manner, of the very best—therefore the dearest—materials. They are seven times ground over and possess a solid body almost unknown in other paints, but see that they are applied to a dry surface. Any paint will peel if applied to a wet or even damp surface. ## Almost Beyond Belief.

Things Often Happen that We Can Scarcely Credit.

This is One of Them, and We Give it to Our Readers.

It May Seem Remarkable, but We Know that it is all True.

A strange tale comes to us from Champlain, N. Y., where the principal in this absorbingly interesting account came very near not now being alive to tell the story.

It would seem that a well-known resident of the town, Barney Wilson by name, fell ill. Now, illness is a common thing, but not so that of Mr. Wilson, as he says himself, now that the danger is all over.

"I cannot describe how I felt or what I suffered.

"It seemed to be at first mostly in my head. I could not think easily; my head felt dull and strange, and I was tired and weak all over.

"I knew my nerves were weak and prostrated; that I had dyspepsia terribly. Why, I could scarcely eat anything from one day to another.

"I could not sleep nights, and woke mornings feeling weak, tired and dragged out. It came near being my death stroke, I tell you, and we did not know what the end would be.

"Can you believe it, I lived and suffered like this for a whole year!

MR. BARNEY WILSON.

"And then, when I had become about hopeless, I saw the advertisement of a medicine, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I procured some from the druggist at once, and before I had taken two bottles I was so much better that I was astonished.

"I continued its use and now I am feeling as well and sound as I ever was in my life. I can truly say that had it not been for Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy I should now be in my grave.

"I have recommended this wonderful remedy to all of my friends. I cannot speak too highly of this great medicine, and I earnestly recommend it to all who are suffering from disease."

Our readers would be foolish indeed if they do not follow Mr. Wilson's advice, if they are sick or out of order, for it is a sure thing that this remarkable remedy cures. Besides it is purely vegetable and harmless. The great physician and specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., discovered it, and he and other physicians prescribe and recommend it. The doctor also can be consulted free of charge in regard to any case, personally or by letter.

Give Love to the Living.

One said: "I never wore a mourning robe or veil for any dead;
I have cried out with bitter wail 'Why did I leave unsaid
The words that would have made them glad?'
I gave to them of love the coin I had,
And so their memory is sweet—not sad."

Dear friends, be pitiful! If you love well, fail not to say
The tender words, and all the secrets tell that fond hearts sway;
Nor wait until is sealed the watching eye in death's eclipse—
Watching in vain for love's sweet, tender sign,
Holding an empty cup for that rare wine,
A draught for which the strongest heart doth pine,
For 'tis indeed, a bitter thing to stand
Above your dead and hold the frozen hand
And feel it can no more love's pressure under stand.

A BLIND SINGER.

Away in old Connecticut, almost three-score and ten years ago, a baby girl opened bright eyes to the light. But alas! in six short weeks the sight was blotted from them, and henceforth she must walk in darkness.

Fortunately, a brave, strong heart was the blind girl's heritage, and she early developed a self-reliance and independence in doing things for herself that was truly remarkable.

Nor was she shut out from the sports of childhood. Her playmates were fond and kind, and she roamed the woods and fields with them in summer and enjoyed the winter coasting in the season of snow and ice. She herself says that when a very little girl, she suddenly realized that she was not like other children, but must always live in a dark world of her own. It is characteristic of her that she at once resolved not to be unhappy over it, but to get and give all the good possible in her life.

Those that know Fannie Crosby can testify that she has done this. When only eight years old, she kissed her mother good-bye, and went to the institution for the blind, in New York city. Here she remained, first as pupil, then as teacher, for twenty-three years. She proved an apt scholar, and became an adept, not only in reading and general knowledge, but also in sewing, knitting, and fancy work.

When quite young she began her literary career, and her first book, "The Blind Girl," was published in 1844. But she soon found that her thoughts naturally shaped themselves into verse. "The Flower Queen," perhaps the most popular cantata even produced in this country, was written by Miss Crosby, and set to music by George F. Root. Some of the most popular songs of that day were from her pen.

But it is as a hymn writer that she is best known. William B. Bradbury first discovered her talents in this direction, and since then she has been kept constantly employed by Biglow & Main, and other publishers. She has written some of our sweetest gospel and Sunday school songs.

In view of her blindness, how significant the hymn:—

"All the way my Saviour leads me,
What have I to ask beside?
Can I doubt His tender mercy,
Who through life has been my guide?"

And also in the hymn, "Every Day and Hour":—

"Through this changing world below
Lead me gently, gently as I go;
Trusting Thee, I cannot stray,
I can never, never lose my way."

We can imagine how, after a day in the jostling, crowded streets of New York, led by a kindly hand, such lines as the above would be written in the safe quietness of her home.

One evening Miss Crosby was attending a mission meeting, when her hymn, "Rescue the Perishing," was sung. At the close, a young man rose, and said that hymn led him to Jesus. He had been a prodigal son, wandering far in and by forbidden paths. He had wasted a goodly heritage of time, money and manly strength for drink and kindred vices. One night, cold, ragged, hungry and penniless, he was passing along the street, almost hopeless when he heard voices singing:—

"Rescue the perishing,
Care for the dying,
Snatch them in pity from sin and the grave."

Guided by the sound, he soon found himself in a mission meeting. Dropping into a back seat, he listened to the rest of the hymn. He had been ready to take some desperate step, but that song proved the means of his salvation. Utterly broken down, he told his story, and his desires for a better life. Loving hands put into practical meaning the words that had been sung and helped him up till his feet stood upon a sure footing.

After the young man had finished the account of his rescue, he remarked that the great desire of his life was to see the author of that hymn, and thank her for what it had done for him. It was a thrilling scene when Fannie Crosby was led up to the speaker, saying with tears of joy as she took his hand, "I wrote that hymn, and I, too, thank God that it was made the means of your salvation."

Miss Crosby's songs are eminently devotional. "Draw Me Nearer," "Only Trusting in My Savior," "Pass Me Not, O Gentle Savior," "Jesus, Keep Me Near the Cross," "Hide Thou Me," are familiar and precious examples. On occasion, her strains become veritable martial music, ringing out like a trumpet call. Among these are found, "Onward, Upward, Christian Soldiers!" "To the Work! To the Work! We are Children of God," "Now Just a Word for Jesus," "Will Jesus Find Us Watching?"

Of all Fannie Crosby has written, her favorite is the hymn, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus." What a comfort these words have been to many a weeping mother, as she laid her darling from her own loving embrace, in the grave. "Safe," not here, but sheltered in the arms of Divine Love. To multitudes of dying Christians the assurance has been precious.

"There, by His love o'ershaded, Sweetly my soul shall rest."

Our blind singer has reached the golden sunset of her life. She impresses everybody as one of the most cheerful, happy persons in the world. She will knit the most intricate lace patterns without a mistake, her fingers working busily as she talks charmingly and modestly of what God has permitted her to do. She feels that it is a great comfort to her to have written words that have upborne other souls to Heaven. As she talks, her face glows with a light that is not of earth, the shining of His presence in her soul; and the listener involuntarily thinks,

"I wonder if ever a song was sung,
But the singer's heart sang sweeter."

Miss Crosby's method of composition is peculiar. Nervously passing her fingers over the pages of a well-worn hymn book, with its raised letters, she dictates rapidly and eloquently to an amanuensis. She is a descendant of the Pilgrims, and was in early life a Presbyterian; but later became a Methodist, and has been for many years a member of the John street church, an active and working Christian. She beams with goodwill, and always meets friends and strangers with a cordial hand-clasp, and a heart-felt "I'm glad to see you."

One of her hymns especially might be called the keynote of her life:—

"Dark is the night, and cold the wind is blowing,
Nearer and nearer come the breaker's roar;
Where shall I go, or whither fly for refuge?
Hide me, my Father, till the storm is o'er!

"With his loving hand to guide, let the clouds above me roll,
And the billows in their fury dash around me;
I can brave the wildest storm, with his glory in my soul,
I can sing amidst the tempest, 'Praise the Lord!'"

That is the song that her life is singing. As she nears the other shore, her longing and joyful hope are best expressed in her own words:—

"Gliding o'er life's fitful waters,
Heavy surges sometimes roll;
And we sigh for yonder haven,
For the Home-land of the soul.

"Blessed Home-land, ever fair,
Sin can never enter there;
But the soul, to life awaking,
Everlasting bloom shall wear."

Soon we must say to our sweet singer, "Good-night!" May the angels meet their sister-soul, as she nears the pearly gates, with "Hail" and "Good-morning!"—Sophie Bronson Titterington, in Michigan Herald.

TO PREVENT DYSPEPSIA.

"It is all very well to take treatment for indigestion and to worry about dyspepsia," was the remark of an experienced physician, after dismissing a number of patients the other day, "but it would be a great deal easier for these people and better for the world if some little preventive measures were taken instead of letting everything go and patching up when conditions become unbearable.

"Half the people I know have violent attacks of indigestion because they will persist in eating hearty meals when in an exhausted condition. They seem never able or willing to realize that there are times when the system is in no fit state to grapple with a full meal. They come in tired and hungry, almost ravenous, thinking that a good deal of what they call hunger is gastric irritation, then sit down to a table covered with the substantials of life, and deliberately go to work to overtax the already strained vital powers. As a rule, paradoxical as it may seem, no person should eat when very hungry. The wise thing to do is to drink a cup of hot water with three or four tablespoonfuls of milk in it, sit down for five minutes and then begin slowly to eat and eat very sparingly.

"If this course were followed, I venture to warrant there would not be one case of dyspepsia where now there are a dozen. It seems to be the most difficult of all things properly to control the appetite. People who are not habitually great eaters are guilty of serious indiscretion in the time and manner of taking food. The great mistake of the day is the lack of consideration of the laws and necessities of the human system."—New York Ledger.

ONE BOY'S DESTINY FIXED.

I once asked a New England clergyman, a classmate of mine, what were his intentions for the future of a vigorous youngster who was playing on the lawn.

"Well," said he, "my wife and I believe in natural selection, and letting a boy follow the bent of his mind. To find out what that was, we left him in the sitting-room one day with a Bible, a silver dollar, and an apple. I said: 'If when we come back he is reading the Bible, I shall train him to follow me as a preacher; if he has pocketed the dollar, I will make a banker of him; if he is playing with the apple, I will put him on a farm.'

"When we returned he was sitting on the Bible, eating the apple from one hand, and clutching the dollar in the other; and I remarked: 'Wife, this boy is a hog; we must make a politician out of him.'"—Chauncey M. Depew.

THE REST.

Now let us tell our story. More appetizing, delicious pork products were never served upon our tables. Sweet and tender—they are the very acme of splendidly prepared products. No wonder the name of Ferris is mentioned wherever the best Hams and Bacon are known and desired; nothing strange in the fact that the best trade all handle them.—New England Grocer.

HOPE HAD FLED!
Chronic Nasal Catarrh!
"People Say it is a Miracle!"
VICTORY FOR DANA'S!

Read this Wonderful Statement, sent us by Church & Hamlin, Pharmacists, Cor. Williams and Pleasant Sts., New Bedford, Mass.:

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.
DEAR SIRS:—I have had Chronic Nasal Catarrh for many years, and have been a great sufferer. Have had five Physicians who have tried to cure me, but they could not help me. My throat was so bad I could eat only the softest food for six months. My nose was swollen out of shape. I could not drink two swallows of water at a time without the nails being forced through my nostrils. My throat was eaten away so badly that one Physician thought I must have a surgical operation. I had given up all hopes of recovery, but through the influence of friends I began using and with the first bottle began to improve. I have taken three bottles and can say I am wonderfully improved, generally and mentally. My throat is all healed. I can eat any hard substance, and people who know me say it is a miracle.

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA

Respectfully yours,
VICTORIA H. JOHNSON.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE,
Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A Friend

Wishes to speak through the Register of the beneficial results he has received from a regular use of AYER'S PILLS. He says: "I was feeling sick and tired and my stomach seemed all out of order. I tried a number of remedies, but none seemed to give me relief until I was induced to try the old reliable Ayer's Pills. I have taken only one box, but I feel like a new man. I think they are the most pleasant and easy to take of anything I ever used, being so finely sugar-coated that even a child will take them. I urge upon all who are of a laxative to try Ayer's Pills."—Boothbay (Me.) Register.

In Need

"Between the ages of five and fifteen I was troubled with a kind of salt rheum, or eruption, chiefly confined to the legs, and especially to the bend of the knee above the calf. Here running sores formed which would scab over, but would break immediately on moving the leg. My mother tried everything she could think of, but all was without avail. Although a child, I read in the papers about the beneficial effects of Ayer's Pills, and persuaded my mother to let me try them. With no great faith in the result, she procured and I began to use them, and soon noticed an improvement. Encouraged by this, I kept on till I took two boxes, when the sores disappeared and have never troubled me since."—H. Chipman, Real Estate Agent, Roanoke, Va.

Ayer's Pills

"I suffered for years from stomach and kidney troubles, causing very severe pains in various parts of the body. None of the remedies I tried afforded me any relief until I began taking Ayer's Pills, and was cured."—Wm. Goddard, Notary Public, Five Lakes, Mich.

YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest, — it is well expended, — you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

When you have a suit of clothes made in proper style, and in the proper way, it is money invested,—as it should be. That is the way we make clothes — in proper style, and in the proper way.

The City of Peace.

On yonder lone hill stands the City of Peace,
And among the dark foliage there
I can see its white spires and glittering domes
Gleam forth through the still evening air.
It has beautiful avenues stretching afar,
And many a cross-running street,
But no sound of horsemen, nor rumble of car,
Nor din of on-hurrying feet.

There's a wide granite wall round the City of Peace,
And its iron gates guard every way;
But no one outside seeks to enter therein,
Nor would any within go astray.
Sweet flowers abound. By mansion and cot
The roses and violets blow,
And yet the inhabitants gather them not
To wear on their bosoms of snow.

There are numberless forms in the City of Peace
Which childhood might claim as its own;
But no rippling laughter, no voices of glee
Resound through those houses of stone.
No toys unremembered the corridors fill,
No need of a guardian's care;
For the dimpled white hands are now folded and still,
And none are disturbed by them there.

There are those from midlife in the City of Peace,
Fair women and brave-hearted men,
With hand from the plowshare, the workshop, the mart,
The chisel, the brush and the pen.
All are there, but no clangor of anvil or loom
Outwearies the sun's waning light,
No glimmer of dim study-lamp with the gloom
Contends through the watches of night.

The aged are there in the City of Peace;
Their thin locks were whitened with grief,
And their shoulders bent low by the burdens of care
They had borne ere they found their relief.
They are there, but their pains and their sorrows are gone,
At the gates of the city they sped,
And the staff and the crutch they had once leaned upon
Have been left with the ills that are fled.

They grow old no more in the City of Peace.
The seasons of bloom and of snow
In rapid succession alternately come
Disarmed of each weapon of woe.
They murmur no more. No discords appear
To mar the serene of that spot,
Where those who had striven in enmity here
Have all of their strivings forgot.

No scepter is known in the City of Peace,
Distinctions no longer divide;
But pontiff and peasant, and beggar and king,
In changeless equality bide.
The same kindly earth folds them fast to her breast,
The same gentle dews nightly fall,
The same zephyrs lull them to untroubled rest,
And the same loving skies are o'er all.

No watchmen of earth walk the City of Peace,
But the angels of God gather there,
And bending in love over each lowly bed
They guard it with tenderest care.
And while these yet linger new legions draw nigh,
Lest the sleepers might waken alone,
And thus to and fro they unceasingly fly
'Twixt the City of Peace and the Throne.

They are waiting for us in the City of Peace,
And, whithersoever we fare,
We shall ne'er find a pathway which leads not at last
With unerring certainty there.
They are waiting for us. We are hastening on,
Each eventide brings us more near
The shadowy portals through which those have gone
Whom we miss in our journeyings here.

O silent, O wonderful, City of Peace,
God's outlying villa of rest,
Where He calls all His children to give them release
From the toils that their lives have oppressed!
O city coeval with time in its birth,
And the last yet to be overthrown,
The gathering place of the millions of earth,
The seaport for countries unknown!
—N. W. Rand, M.D., in the Congregationalist.

LIVING IN PAPER BAGS.

"For he's going to marry Yum-Yum,
He's going to marry Yum-Yum, Yum-Yum,
He's going to marry Yum-Yum."

This last note is drawled out in a miserable attempt at a profound bass by the freshest sweetest, clearest voice in the world, and is followed by a silvery peal of laughter so like a bird's joyous thrill that for a moment I am inclined to think it is only a continuation of the chorus of the little songsters that have been singing outside my window all morning. But a moment's reflection convinces me otherwise, and I rise slowly from my desk where I have been struggling all morning with a perplexing account-book, and glance out of my window in the direction whence the sound proceeds.

It is one of the loveliest, sunniest May days. The sky is cloudless—blue. The orchard is powdered with snowy apple blossoms, which last night's rain has washed from the trees, and standing under them, rifling them of their remaining glories, are my sister Genevieve and her devoted lover, Charley Somers. This young man has been, to use the housemaid's expression, "hanging around" Vieve for many months, and while he is not particularly wise, he is good and kind, and what is more—at least to us, in our financial embarrassments—rich.

Vieve has many admirers; for she is lovely and winsome, but wilful in the extreme. At present her choice seems to waver between this young man and another—a Professor Moore, in our college—which college is the pride and delight of our village. The latter met Genevieve last season at a famous watering-place, whither she had been taken by one our friends, a gay, worldly woman, who delights to act as chaperon to lovely young girls, as an excuse for mingling in the gaieties of such places herself, and then when the season is over, allows them to drift back to their quiet, dull country homes and narrow sordid lives. Whether this is a wise or useful experience for young girls I very much doubt, but, at any rate, it has not spoiled Genevieve. She comes back to us fresh and gay and smiling as ever; takes up the old burdens with only an occasional outbreak when some pressing economy is needed, or something which she considers especially mean has to be done because there is no money with which to do better.

We are very poor. My mother died when Vieve was three years old, and our brother still a baby. To me, these children are my life. For their dear sakes no sacrifice is too great. Our old country home is lovely and comfortably fitted up, but when my father died, five years ago, we found ourselves almost destitute, with only the barest pittance for an income. This I am trying bravely to eke out until our boy is old enough to put his shoulder to the wheel. Anything to keep the old home together, and keep my lovely young sister under my wing rather than send her out, in her beautiful freshness, to labor for her daily bread, and grow hardened in so doing.

We have the most absurdly ridiculous nicknames. I was christened Elanor, in the delusive hope, I suppose, that I would grow up into a tall, stately princess, to do credit and honor to the house. But, alas! like many human hopes—all vain. To the whole neighborhod, Miss Elanor West is only a dumpy, stout little spinster, with glasses awry on her nose, and an everlasting account book in her hand. Later in life, Genevieve dubbed me Eve, because of my inordinate curiosity—still later Adam, because, she asserted, laughingly, I had the curiosity of Eve and Adam combined. So this latter has grown to be my constant appellation. We have all sorts of quaint names for her. The boy was christened Ethelbert, but, in my younger days, acting as a mother to him, I called him "Treasure," mostly. This soon shortened into "Tredge," in our familiar, affectionate way; so Tredge he is, and Tredge he will be to the end of the chapter.

Glancing out of the window, I see Vieve and Mr. Somers sauntering slowly toward the house. She is bright and gay—he, moody and desperate-looking. Vieve swings her broad hat carelessly on her arm, and I see that the wicked girl has decorated the poor young man with apple blooms until he looks like a veritable Bottom. But I also see that he is fiercely plucking them them off, and, as they pass through the hall, the floor is strewn with the delicate, dainty things, which he has cast from him. She gives me a wicked glance as they pass my door, while he bestows upon me a courteous, cool—very cool, "Good morning, Miss Elanor," and hurries out through the gate. Genevieve rushes in with a boisterous:—

"Well, Ad, who next?"

"Oh, Vieve," I say ruefully, "that young man has gone and done it again, I know."

"He has, dear old Ad," she admits. "But I think this time is the last. I would not, Ad—I could not be so mean and small, you know."

She throws herself at my feet, her head upon my knees, her eyes wandering out to the orchard, where, evidently a very tragic scene has taken place. She goes on hurriedly:—

"I know I said if Charley Somer ever proposed to me egain, I would accept. I know I said I was tired of this pinching life—for," timidly, "you know it is pinching, Ad, dear. I know I said I had heard of the great inconvenience of living in trunks—I tried that last season in the mountains; even the lesser inconvenience of living in bureau drawers. I know I said last week, when I came home from Mrs. Graham's, with her elegant, artistic house and pantries stocked—literally overflowing with the good things of life—I said I could not endure living in paper bags any longer—I know I did; but, Ad, when Charlie to-day offered me his hand—full, yes, full, Ad, of every comfort and luxury—somehow," she says, hesitatingly, "I could not. I don't know why, but I couldn't."

"Well, dear," I reply, slowly, "If you don't love him—"

"That's it, Adam," she says, positively, "I don't and I can't; so, dear old Ad, it's paper bags a little longer."

"All right, dear," I say, meekly; "If you feel that way, but—if you could, you, know—of course, only if you could, how nice it would be!"

"Yes," she says, laughing merrily, "very nice, but I am afraid I offended him this time beyond redemption. I am afraid, Ad, dear," slowly, "I behaved very badly, for, do you know, there rushed over my mind the picture of me 'toddling away on my wedding day with the Lord High Executioner,' and I behaved—yes, very badly, Adam. I don't want Charley, Ad. I want nobody but you."

"All right," I say, teasingly, "but take care you never want any Moore."

"Adam!" she says, sternly, shaking her finger at me as she rises, with the faintest blush upon her face, "if you are ever guilty again of such an execrable pun, I shall bring Charley right in, and make you marry him off-hand, to save our family honor, and, better—our credit!"

The next evening, as it is growing dusk, I am sitting on the front piazza amid clustering vines, whose fragrant blooms are bending them down, waiting for Vieve to come home from Dress Parade on College Hill. The moon is slowly rising; and I know she has wandered into a walk with one of her fervant devotees, and will likely come home with another victim dangling at her heels. I have scarcely thought this until I see her approaching—with two victims—Mr. Somers and Geoffrey Moore. How she has inveigled Charley into her toils again, after yesterday's exploit, I cannot imag—but there he is, and to him she is chatting gaily, glibly, almost ignoring the stately professor, who walks gravely beside them.

I cannot shut my eyes to the difference between these men, though one is rich, the other, poor.

Alas! that I have grown so mercenary and little—even over the guestion of my darling's heart! The one—gay, debonair, but shallow. The other—noble, manly such a sure, safe protector and guide for my wayward Genevieve, but then—those little, cramping ills of poverty!

The night is so lovely that they sit down beside me on the piazza, and now,—sure that she has snared her bird safely again—she turns the battery of her irresistible forces upon the Professor, and is provoking, bewitching, exasperating, all in one breath. In some way the conversation turns upon rank and wealth and their advantages.

"I shall never marry except for love, of course," she says; "but then I never could love any one but a man who can give me all the luxury of wealth."

The first sentence evidently to snub poor Charley. The last to frown down any presumptuous advances on the part of the Professor.

"I do not believe that, Miss Genevieve," he says, gravely, "you belie yourself. What good to a true woman's heart are all the comforts and dainty things that wealth can purchase, if there be no love? What good the honor and rank of a thousand dead ancestors if the present man be wanting in nobleness?"

"A great deal," she says, decidedly. "I should want to know that his family had been great and—wealthy, for ages and ages—with old family portraits handed down for generations—coat of arms, and all that sort of thing. Why, even as to ourselves," she adds, with a curious twinkle in her eyes, "Ad, what is our family insignia—our old heraldic coat of arms?"

This was a gracious, questioning glance at me, when she knows we have always been nobodies!

"What did you say, Adam, dear?"

"Oh, Vieve!" I stammer in reply, "why will you try to turn everything into ridicule? You know I cannot—"

"Ad," she says, "you are too modest. You underate your own descriptive abilities. Well! I can't describe, but I can draw. Mr. Moore, will you kindly lend me a card and a pencil?"

And that gentleman producing these articles, that audacious girl draws a very credible grocer's paper bag and gravely hands it to him. He glances at it in a mystified manner.

"To make it more perfect," she says, recklessly, "you might inflate it a little—a very little, wee bit, for there is very little in it, Ad, dear, isn't there?"

Three days later, Vieve and the Professor have gone out riding. She was daintylooking and gay when they set out; to me his face had an unfamiliar look, as if he had made up his mind to risk all and try his fate. My heart is stirred to its depths, for there is no light shallow love to be easily set aside. This man will never forget, and yet Vieve will never wed poverty. She cannot love the rich man, so will have none of him; she does not love—ah is that true? I am afraid she loves the poor man—but, at all events,—she will not marry him. So there is nothing left, as we children used to say, when we counted the buttons on our dresses, but "beggar-man" and "thief." God forbid!

They came in quite late. She has a flush upon her smooth, round cheek, but a troubled look in her eyes. He is very grave and quiet as he lingers on the piazza a few minutes. When he has gone, she comes in very quietly. When I assist her to remove her riding dress, she says:

"Ad, dear, this ride has given me such a fearful headache that I cannot see any of those chattering boys to-night. Entertain them for me please, won't you, that's a dear!"

This is all she says to me, although I know there is something wrong, and late that night, when the "boys" are all gone, I find her with her fair head lying in the moonlight in the window.

"Don't light the lamp yet," she says, as I come in. "I want to tell you, Ad, dear. This hasn't been quite like the rest," very wearily and sadly, "for I like him very much but oh! Ad, we have been poor so long. I could not wrong you all so much by not doing better for you than this. But he is true, Ad, so we won't laugh over it, you know." Her face is turned away from me a moment. "Well! it is settled now, so go to bed, dear. I will come directly."

"Vieve," I began, passionately, "if you care for this man, don't wreck his own life and his—"

"Hush, Ad!" she interrupts. "It is all over. I guess Ill have to take Charley yet."

A week later Vieve and I are in the parlor reading when Professor Moore comes in, very pale, but resolute, to say good-bye. He is going away, he says, as he found he could give up his present position for a better "and" he adds, bitterly, "this place has become unendurable to me."

I glance at Vieve. She is deadly pale, and the scarlet roses at her fair throat are trembling. He has but a moment in which to say good-bye, so I extend my hand, feeling very regretful that we must lose this noble, true friend.

Why will they all fall in love with Vieve?

"Miss Elanor," he says, his voice slightly trembling, "I shall never forget your great kindness to me. May God bless you for it! I shall probably never see you again—"

He pauses—my hand trembles and I turn away.

"Vieve," he says, hurriedly, "good-bye."

"Good-bye," she says, her face very pa'e.

"I am sorry—I know you can never care for me again—I know you never will—"

"Vieve," he interrupts, gravely, "I shall always love you as I do now, but—"

"I know," she replies, pettishly. "You are disappointed with me. You thought I was better, nobler, truer."

I am provoked with her. Woman-like, she is trying to make him still think well of her, even when she has bidden him leave her.

"Hush, Vieve," he says. "Good-bye. It is all over now." He let her hand fall and turns away to leave the room.

"Adam!" she cries, passionately, "don't let him go!"

I do not move. If anything is to be done, she must do it.

"Geoffrey!" she says, softly, crimsoning at her own audacity. He pauses irresolutely. "Geoffrey!" still more softly and going nearer to. "It is not all over. I do care for you. Stay! I love you very dearly and I am willing to be your wife as you asked me."

He turns and takes her in his arms. I am softly crying to myself by this time, for she is noble and true, after all.

"I do love you," she says, bravely, but her face is half hidden. "I don't mind poverty—with you." This with an indescribable, adoring look which takes away the last remnents of doubt the young man has left. Then she looks up at him with eyes full of laughter, and says: "I just love to live in paper bags!"

At that, I leave in disgust.

Two months afterward they are married. But his little secret is out. He is wealthy—far wealthier than Mr. Somors, and had only used this ruse to see if Vieve was true enough to love him for himself. When the wedding cards came out, everybody was a little mystified, for, while very elaborate and costly, the outside cover bore a quaint design, much resembling the ordinary paper bag used by tradesmen generally. But, being Professor Moore's, they were pronounced "quite unique—so artistic, you know." But where did they ever get the idea?

Vieve casts down her eyes very demurely, and says:—

"I can't imagine, Ad; can you?"—Betty M. Thomas, in Pittsburg Bulletin.

DISAPPOINTMENT FOR TWO.

The snow was already five inches deep and still falling. A Bellefield housekeeper looked at the 75 feet of sidewalk just in front of her house and at the 150 feet on the side street, and groaned.

Just then a tramp made his way through the "beautiful," and asked for something to eat.

The housekeeper's eyes brightened. She had seen him before.

"You were here last summer?" she remarked, interrogatively.

"Quite likely, madam."

"You were then, as now, looking for something to eat?"

"Precisely. I sometimes eat in summer."

"If I remember correctly I told you to mow the lawn and I would give you a good dinner. You replied you would like to, but that lawn-mowing was not your profession. You were a snow-shoveller. Am I right?"

"Doubtless you are, madam."

"Then here is a chance for you. Shovel the snow from the pavements and you shall eat to repletion."

"Madam," replied he, "I should dearly love to oblige you, but it is impossible. It is true I was a snow-shoveller by profession last year, but I have changed my occupation. Now I am a trimmer of rose bushes. It was Emerson, I believe, who insisted that we should not persist too long in one line of business, lest we become one-sided. Now, if you have any rose bushes which need—"

She had gone in and shut the door, and the tramp meandered slowly away.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

COLUMBUS DID THIS.—The boys in a certain school were required to write an essay on Columbus, and one of them produced this: "Columbus was the man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Columbus, 'Can you discover America?' 'Yes,' said Columbus, 'if you will give me a ship.' So he had a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarreled and said they believed there was no such place, but after many days the pilot called to him and said, Columbus, I see land.' 'Then that is America,' said Columbus. When the ship got near the land was full of black men. Columbus said, 'Is this America?' 'Yes, it is,' said they. 'I suppose you are the niggers?' 'Yes,' they said, we are; and the chief said, 'I suppose you are Columbus?' 'You're right,' said he. Then the chief turned to his men and and said, 'There is no help for it; we are discovered at last.'"

In America on New Year's everybody calls on everybody else and brings a present with them. Mr. Norman tell us that the Japanese, who are eager to copy western customs, have adopted the more attractive part of the American programme and omitted the other. A Japanese gentleman puts a box outside his door with this inscription: "To Visitors—I am out. I wish you a happy New Year. N. B.—Please put your presents in the box."—Illustrated London News.

HEREAFTER.

When all life's storms are still,
And all life's noises into calm have passed,
When rest and quiet come to us at last,
What matter good or ill?

What matters love or hate?
Calm hands are folded o'er a quiet breast,
The weary head is pillowed in sweet rest,
And sorrow comes too late!

What matters wealth or fame?
The narrow grave is all that earth can give;
The deathless soul in other worlds shall live,
And men forget our name.

What matters aught of earth?
The passing pictures of a shadowed dream,
The changing eddies of a turbid stream,—
Sure these are nothing worth.

Why, then, despond, my friend?
The one thou lovest has but found at last
Sweet peace, and calm, and rest when toil is past.
And death is not the end!

PALMER NEWS.

SEVERE SNOW STORMS.

Blocking the Railroads and Highways, and Suspending Business.

Not since the blizzard of 1888 has New England seen such weather as that of the past week. It commenced Friday night with about eight inches of light snow. Sunday night about ten inches more fell, accompanied by a high wind and the mercury down to zero, making the snow dry and easily drifted. The wind piled it up in the exposed places, and the roads were impassable at many points. The Wales stage did not attempt to get through—in fact it has not been seen since last Saturday—and it was not considered safe to send the stage which brings the scholars from Bondsville to the high school Monday, Tuesday or yesterday, and the one from Thorndike was not run yesterday. The wind blew hard and the mercury clung to zero all day Monday, making it the worst for many years for market men and delivery teams, many of which discontinued their trips. Trains on all the railroads were late, and the New London Northern road had quite an experience at State Line. The morning trains down got through all right, as did the one reaching Palmer from the south at 10.30. Then a south-bound freight got stuck in the drift at State Line, stopping one which was following some distance back. The engine on the first train got out of water and uncoupled to go to Stafford for more, but then couldn't get back to the cars. The engine on the second train started to go to the assistance of the train ahead, but stuck when within about five car-lengths and could not be moved either way. The water gave out and the fire had to be drawn. Word was sent back to Palmer and a gang went down with the snow plow to dig them out. It was hard work. The wind had a long sweep across the flat where the cars were stalled, and had piled the snow up as high as the top of the tender of the stalled engine, packing it so hard that a person walking on it hardly left a track, and making the digging about as hard as if the material were earth instead of snow. The cars were finally moved, however, and the 1.50 and 7.10 p. m. trains for the south left Palmer together at 12.30 Tuesday morning. Station Agent Fish, who had charge of the rescue gang, froze his ears, cheeks and the tip of his nose, besides badly frosting his toes.

Tuesday night and Wednesday there was another heavy fall of snow, eight or ten inches of it being on the ground by daylight, causing such a tie-up of business and travel as is seldom seen in this section. On the Boston and Albany road the first train from Springfield, which is made up there, came in an hour late, following a snow plow. The following trains which started from that city were as near on time as could be expected, but those which came through over other roads kept getting later and later, some of them being five hours behind time. The morning accommodation train from Boston was an hour and a half late, with others straggling along during the day. Two snow plows were kept chasing each other up and down the section between Springfield and Worcester, but they could not keep the tracks open on account of the wind, which filled the cuts about as fast as they were cleared out. The afternoon trains were reasonably on time, and a large number of Palmer people took the 5.28 to Springfield to attend the Wagner concert. A few went on the 6.10 accommodation, which was sent ahead of the New York express on account of the lateness of the latter, and they spent the evening listening to the wind whistling around the cars in the cut about a quarter of a mile west of the Indian Orchard station, where the train was stalled in a big drift which had formed in the hour since the passage of the previous train. It was finally abandoned where it was, and the passengers taken to Springfield on the New York express, which had been held at Palmer until the south track could be cleared and then sent along on that. They arrived in that city just in time to take the train for home with those who had been to the concert, the traing being the one which usually passes here about 8 o'clock without stopping. Camp's train, due here at 7.05, was held until after this had gone through. On the Ware River road Conductor Warner's train in the morning was down from Barre Plains about on time, and Sedgwick's train was sent north behind a plow about an hour late. These trains were the only ones over the road during the day, the morning train down from Winchendon and the noon train to Barre being discontinued. Sedgwick's train returned from Winchendon at night, and Warner's train went to Barre at 8, an hour late. The train from Brattleboro on the New London Northern road got in all right, but waited here until 10.15 to take on board the Duff Opera Company, en route to Norwich. It started out with two engines and went all right until Smith's Bridge, just at the foot of the State Line grade, was reached. There it stuck in a drift. The engines were uncoupled from the cars and the rails cleared of snow for about 100 feet, the members of the opera company helping well with shovels, and then the locomotives managed to push through to the top of the grade, returning for the cars. The train from New London due in Palmer at 8 Wednesday evening got stuck in a drift at State Line and reached here about 9 o'clock yesterday morning, while the 10.30 train yesterday morning was snowed in for two hours and a half at Lebanon. Snow plows were run over the road all day Wednesday, but on account of the wind did but little good unless a train followed closely.

There was little travel about the streets of the village, and consequently but little business, the merchants and their clerks having an easy time of it. One, on looking over his cash drawer at night remarked that it contained almost as much as when the store opened in the morning, and his experience was about that of all. During the forenoon the snow fell so rapidly that little effort was made to clear the sidewalks, and those who attempted to keep them clear had a large contract on their hands. But few teams were out, and they had hard work to wallow through the snow. Yesterday morning teams were employed in all parts of the town breaking out the roads. A plow is fastened on each side of the rear runner of a heavy sled, which is drawn by one or more pairs of heavy horses. This widens the road pretty well with the exception of the drifts, which must be shoveled out. Huge piles of snow line the streets, and in some places the sidewalks, for there are people who are willing to wait and let the sun do their work for them.

PHILLIPS ATTEMPTS SUICIDE

In his Cell, after being Bound Over to the Superior Court.

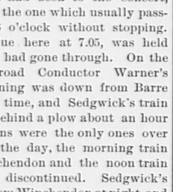
Peter Phillips, who pounded his wife so brutally in Three Rivers a few weeks ago, had a hearing in the district court last Saturday, Associate Justice George H. Newton of Monson presiding. Lawyers Taft and Fitch appeared for Phillips, and W. W. Leach for the prosecution. The charge was assault with intent to kill, and was well sustained, the evidence showing that Phillips had tried to kill the woman, and supposed that he had done so. He told parties with whom he talked the next day that he was waiting for a chance to kill the whole family.



He was found guilty and bound over to the superior court in $1000 bonds. The trial was not finished until afternoon, and Phillips was placed in a cell in the lockup while Officer Healey went for his dinner previous to taking the prisoner to Springfield. C. L. Alexander, who has charge of the tramp room, passed Phillips's cell a few minutes after and the prisoner remarked, "It is nice to have a lot of people come and lie about you; but never mind, I'll put myself out of their way, and don't you forget it." He was told to keep still and nothing more was thought of the matter. When Officer Healey came back for his man he said "I told you I'd do it," and on being asked what he meant said "Poison myself, I've taken Paris green." He held out his hand and it was covered with the substance. He was at once put back in the cell and Medical Examiner Holbrook sent for. By the time he arrived the poison had begun to take effect, and the victim sank into a stupor. He was somewhat conscious when aroused, but declared firmly that he wouldn't take anything and wanted to die, but by a little choking he was forced to take an emetic, and recovered sufficiently to be taken to the jail at Springfield on the 5.28 train at night. He had carried the poison inside his stocking on the right foot, and had evidently had it some time, as the paper which contained it was pretty well worn. The above cut is an excellent likeness of Phillips, the sketch being made by T. J. McCarthy during the trial.

A Pastor Called.

At a meeting of the Congregational church last evening to consider the question of calling a pastor, it was unanimously voted to extend a call to Rev. Frank E. Jenkins of New Decatur, Ala., who has supplied the pulpit the last two Sundays. H. B. Knox, H. P. Holden and Dr. William Holbrook were appointed a committee to confer with the committee of the parish in the matter. A parish meeting is called for next Friday evening, at 7, when it is expected that the parish will unite with the church in the call. Mr. Jenkins was ordained in 1881, on graduation from Hartford Theological Seminary. Among other work he has had charge of field work among the churches of Maine, and also a new work in the "Mountain White" region of the South. He has also held the position of Field Superintendent of the American Missionary Association Work in the South. In 1890 he resigned this position to take the pastorate of the church at New Decatur, where he has since remained. His success in his present field is unusually good, but the health of his wife, who is at the home of her parents in Connecticut and is told by her physician that she must not return South, compels him to make a change.

For Selectmen.

The time draws near for the annual town meeting, and yet little is heard concerning the possible candidates for the offices. It is pretty well understood that Mr. Brainerd declines to be considered again in the field for the office of selectmen. There is a strong feeling that so capable an official as Mr. Getchell should be continued in office, and it is probable that the Republican caucus would nominate him but for the fact that he declines the honor. The other member of the present board, Mr. Twiss, is pretty sure of a renomination, probably by both parties, and a consequent election. For a candidate from this village the Democrats would like to nominate George E. Buck, but he seems to think that he has enough business now on hand, and it is doubtful if his consent to a nomination can be obtained. The Republicans will quite likely settle upon C. T. Brainerd, who has had charge of the highways in this section during the year. Among the other names mentioned are those of John F. Hanifin of Bondsville, and John O. Hamilton of the north part of the town. The dates for the caucuses are not yet decided upon.

State Primary School Notes.

Miss Hancock and her assistant, Miss Smith, are at the school.

The second of the mid-winter entertainments will be given in the chapel this evening.

Wednesday afternoon Dr. Gable gave the children at the hospital a "Washington" party. Remarks by Supt. Wheeler, a recitation by Miss Adelaide Smith of Dedham, with games and refreshments helped to pass a pleasant afternoon in spite of the severe storm outside.

Monday evening Dr. Gable was for once surprised. She gives such pleasant little parties that several of her friends thought they would give her one, and as it was her birthday several went up to the hospital and presented her with a set of gold-lined orange spoons and six China fruit plates. Games were played and refreshments served, and everyone passed a very enjoyable evening.

The trouble was soon remedied, and the apparatus all right once more.

The body was brought to Palmer for burial Tuesday, the services taking place at the Congregational church, Rev. A. W Weeks, formerly pastor of the Baptist church, officiating.

The question is asked if there is no law to compel the clearing of sidewalks of snow. There are walks in the village, some of them on the most traveled streets, which the owners have hardly cleared once this winter, certainly not since either of the storms this week, and pedestrians in those localities think they have some rights that should be respected. If there is a law in regard to the matter they think it should be enforced, and if there is none then it is high time there should be.

Judge Robinson has been confined to his house this week by the injuries received at the time of his fall last week. His arm is still quite painful, and it was at first thought that three of the ribs on the left side had been cracked, but they proved to be only badly strained, and he hopes to be out again in a day or two. John E. McKenna of Boston, Grand Guide of the Royal Arcanum, spent the day with him Monday, and F. Dargin, Grand Chaplain, and wife of Springfield, called on him Tuesday.

Frost, the president of the society, presided, and Mrs. W. H. Hitchcock and Mrs. C. W. Bennett conducted the devotional service. The speaker, Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason of Boston, gave an earnest address, in which she faithfully portrayed the evils of the saloon and urged the voters of Palmer to place the town in the list of no-license towns at the March town meeting.

A party of Palmer fishermen went to Orcutts, Ct., last Friday, but as the luck there was not of the best they took the next train back and stopped at State Line. Fishing through the ice on the State Line pond has been prohibited by the Legislature of that state for a term of years, and the time is not yet out. The party had no better luck here than in the first place, had given it up and had just crossed the line into Massachusetts when an officer from Stafford Springs drove up, intending to arrest the fishermen, but concluded that he would wait until he caught them on the Connecticut side, and the members of the party will be careful how they visit Stafford for a time, and will post themselves on the law the next time they try fishing in Connecticut waters.

The question for the afternoon was "How is Your Local Work Conducted?" and addresses were given by Miss Grace Blackford of Eldorado, O., Miss M. L. Bartlett and Mrs. Marion Crossley of Springfield, W. W. Leach and Rev. H. F. Moulton of Palmer. From 5 to 6 there was a social in the parlors, and supper was served in the dining room at 6. At 6.30 there was a praise service led by Rev. Harry Blackford of Monson, and at 7 a mass meeting. Addresses were given by Miss Mary Moulton of Cambridge, secretary of the state union, on "Home Missionary Work," and by Omer G. MR. CLEVELAND has completed the selection of his cabinet, which is generally conceded to be a strong one. It will be seen that Massachusetts is favored with a place in the official family, which is as follows:

Secretary of State—Walter Q. Gresham of Illinois.
Secretary of the Treasury—John G. Carlisle of Kentucky.
Attorney General—Richard Olney of Massachusetts.
Secretary of War—Daniel S. Lamont of New York.
Postmaster General—Wilson S. Bissell of New York.
Secretary of the Navy—Hilary A. Herbert of Alabama.
Secretary of the Interior—Hoke Smith of Georgia.
Secretary of Agriculture—J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska.

BOSTON may be sedate and dignified, and not up to the rush and bustle way of doing things in New York, but when it comes to monuments and raising funds for them she can give the latter city large odds and a double discount and then beat her at her own game. About $75,000 has already been subscribed for a monument in Copley Square to Phillips Brooks, and it is now proposed to build a hall for religious and social purposes at Harvard, to cost about $300,000. Dr. Brooks's class, that of 1885, has promised the last $10,000 of each $100,000.

GIVE the average American a chance to get two dollars for one and he will snap at it instanter. Or give him a chance to buy some old antiquity of the mediæval times and he will be sure to pay well for it, but he kicks on paying a dollar for thirty-odd cents' worth of silver made into a coin and called a Columbian souvenir half dollar, and they are a drug in the market. Uncle Sam had better lay them aside about 100 years, and they will bring more money than at present.

GOVERNOR MCKINLEY of Ohio has lost all of his property through the failure of a friend whom he trusted implicitly and whose notes he had generously signed. Every cent is swept away, as his savings amounted to only about $20,000. As a testimonial for past services to the Republican party a New York Republican club proposes to start a fund for him, subscriptions to be limited to $1.

PRINCESS KAIULANI of Hawaii is said to be coming from London, where she is being educated, to the United States to plead for the restoration of her throne. Unless she hurries up she will find the matter all settled before she gets here, and that she is no longer "in it" except as a citizen of the United States.

HUGH O'DONNELL, who has been on trial at Pittsburg, Pa., for murder on account of his connection with the riots at Homestead, has been declared not guilty by the jury, but there can be no doubt that he is morally responsible for the death of the Pinkerton men.

Gen. P. G. T. D. Beauregard, one of the prominent generals in the Confederate Army, and for years manager of the Louisiana state lottery, died at his home in New Orleans Monday evening, nearly 75 years old.

THE Reading railroad of Pennsylvania was placed in the hands of receivers Monday.

AN unusual occurrence in business matters was brought out last week by the death of Benjamin S. Johnson, president and founder of the savings bank at Haydenville. After his death it became known that his son, who was a clerk in the bank at the time of his death about two years ago, had been a defaulter to the extent of $11,562, and that his father had turned in every dollar he had to prevent the exposure of his son's disgrace. The facts had been known all along to the bank officials, but so carefully were they concealed that the story was a complete surprise to the community. Mr. Johnson had but just cleared his property at the time of his son's being found out, and though his wife could have held an interest in the estate, she willingly signed the deeds which turned the old homestead over to the bank and left them penniless. The father rapidly broke down under the blow, and died of a broken heart.

THE verdict of the coroner's jury regarding the recent burning of the insane asylum at Dover, N. H., with over 50 inmates, is that the cause of the fire is unknown, and that the inmates "came to their death by misfortune," which is little consolation for those whose friends so miserably perished. It is misfortune enough to be confined in any institution of that kind, which should be made as near fire-proof as skill and money can construct. The real cause of the fire was in appropriating for the construction of the building a sum so small that it must needs be of wood, and to those who were responsible for that state of affairs the blame is justly due.

Marble and Mr. Scott of Plymouth on Sunday evening. Mr. Anderson was to speak on Monday, but was blocked in by the snow and unable to get here, so the meeting was given up. It is hoped an interest in temperance has been awakened. About 150 have signed the pledge.

District Attorney Gaskill feels quite sure that the verdict will stand, and Shea will be sentenced at the November term of the superior court. If by any chance the exceptions should be allowed the case will come up again for trial in November. The committee have a strong case against Shea, and will push it to the end.

A few citizens of this hamlet boarded the 6.18 train Wednesday evening with the intention of going to Springfield to attend the Prohibition banquet, but were stalled at Indian Orchard instead, and arrived home in the early morn. Wednesday was a dull day for the merchants. The banks and schools were closed, and the severe storm kept nearly everybody at home. The severe snow storms of Saturday, Monday and Wednesday have made traveling in the out districts very difficult, and in some cases dangerous. A large force of men and teams were employed on Thursday to break out the roads.

The regular meeting of the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association was held on Wednesday evening in its room over the national bank. Ferdinand LeClaire read a very interesting paper on "Ware as it was and as it is," and a very enjoyable evening was spent. It is understood that this association is endeavoring to form a Young Men's Christian Association, and it is hoped this may be accomplished, as it would be of great advantage to the town. A prayer meeting is held at their rooms this evening, to which all young men are cordially invited. Next Wednesday evening C. W. Eddy will entertain the association by showing them some of God's works as seen through the microscope.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union listened to an address by C. W. Eddy on the solution of the temperance question by the Morrell liquor cure treatment, which Mr. Eddy has the agency for in Ware. The subject was presented from a Christian standpoint and as auxiliary to Christian work. Personal letters from Dr. Morrell, as well as from the secretary of the company, and testimonials of remarkable cures were read. Some personal experiences were given. The union was asked to aid by their prayers, and by personal work to persuade men to take the treatment, and to talk with the wives, mothers and sisters of the poor unfortunates that they may better understand the treatment, and persuade the loved ones to be saved.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, Feb. 22, 1893.

It is evident that the state board of agriculture regards the danger from the gypsy moth as most serious, for the committee on agriculture has reported unanimously an appropriation of $165,000, in addition to the unexpended balance of last year, to be spent under the oversight of the state board for the extermination of the gypsy moth. This report was made after a careful hearing by the committee.

Some theorist with more zeal than sense proposes a bill to limit in a most extreme way the discharge of polluting matter in streams, whether or not they are used as a source of water supply. It is said, and with but little exaggeration, that if it should become a law every farmer would have to put a water-tight inclosure around his barnyard. The movement has excited the opposition of the mill owners all over the state, and there is a strong indignation against the bill. The protest promises to be effective, and with the present temper of the representatives the bill will have very few friends in the House.

The purpose of the Democrats to make much political capital out of the disagreement was further emphasized by the long debate in the Senate, where the measure to abolish the council was debated on party lines, and was defeated by a straight party vote. The situation has changed since 1880, when John D. Long was governor and advised the abolition of the council, though even then he could not carry the Republican party with him. But the check which a Republican council has been on the Democratic governors Butler and Russell has made it certain that the dominant party will hold on to the council as long as possible, and it looks more as if Democratic support would defeat the change than that popular demand for the change would raise the Democratic party to a majority in the state.

A bill has been reported for the extermination of insect pests which puts the matter wholly in the hands of local authorities, and allows them to raise money by taxation for killing such pests in the highways.

The vote in the House this year on the woman suffrage question cannot well be compared with that of previous years, because it was complicated in a new way. The bill as reported from the committee gave plain municipal suffrage, but soon after the discussion opened Mr. White of Brookline, a Democrat who declared that he was opposed to woman suffrage on principle, proposed an amendment to have the question voted upon by the people at the next state election, the women to be allowed to vote the same as the men, and the act to be valid if it secured a majority of the entire number thus voting. This amendment was not wanted by the suffragists and, as the vote showed, was not wanted by some of the anti-suffragists. The effect of the motion was to throw the debate and the vote into utter confusion. Members who were opposed to the bill voted freely for the amendment, and vice versa. But the amendment was carried by 110 to 91. Then came the main question. The suffragists did not want the bill as it was, but they did not want to vote against it,—some did not. On the other hand, members who disbelieved in the suffrage could vote for the bill and thus refer the question to the people, believing they would reject the measure and thus take it out of the Legislature, just as the prohibitory constitutional amendment was taken out. Other opponents of suffrage for women preferred to kill the bill on the spot. The result was that the bill was refused a third reading by 88 yeas to 97 nays and 14 pairs. The speaking was not of the highest order on either side. Messrs. Roe of Worcester and Leonard of Waltham were the best for the bill, and Mr. Wellman of Holden against it.

It is singular that the bill to repeal the liquor license limitation law, which has been reported to the House, is in charge of the only minister in the Legislature, Rev. John Brown of Fall River, a Scotchman, and the only Independent Republican. To hear him talk in committee one would soon learn that he has a great horror of kitchen barrooms as they flourish in Fall River, and he prefers to take his chances with an unlimited number of saloons if a city or town votes for license. A minority of the committee dissent and there will surely be a sharp fight on the bill.

It is not late enough yet to judge fairly of the Legislature, but I am disposed to believe that it is more able, more honest and more industrious than either the Legislature of 1891 or 1892. It could not well be worse than the last, and so far seems clearly much its superior. It is hampered by the new rules of Speaker Barrett, which, with very poor judgment, he has had carried through to the great delay of business, and the House is disposed to be talkative. But it seems to be honestly trying to serve the public interest, and that is much when one thinks of the corruption which stalked freely here last year. They have defeated Barrett's order for prorogation the first Wednesday of May, because it was too absurd for reasonable men to consider, but that defeat does not signify a dilatory temper in the House.

The weather was most abominable for Gov. Russell's annual public reception from 10.30 to 12.30 Wednesday, and only 307 people were present, instead of over 2000 a year ago. The notables were few, and the street gamins, happy to see the governor, were in about the same proportion as usual to the well-dressed.

A Justice of the Peace Says.

Hon. John Nealey, justice of the peace and ex-member of the House of Representatives from Meredith, N. H., was for twelve years a terrible sufferer with rheumatism. He says: "I cannot obtain any medicine which does me so much good as your Sulphur Bitters, and I think it is the best medicine made."

Not have confidence in that which has done me a world of good? If you had suffered years with liver complaint and got cured by using Sulphur Bitters, would you not, too, have confidence in them? J. R. NASH, Hotel Winthrop, Boston.

Forbes & Wallace's.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., February, 1893.

Every woman wishing to be en rapport with the styles for the coming spring and summer must study the fabrics that are the envoys extraordinary from the courts of foreign fashions.

In the way of new and novelty dress fabrics we have

Lyon's printed silks,
Printed India silks,
Printed glace silks,
English and Scotch woolens,
Silk and wool mixtures,
French novelty weaves,
Dappled cheviots,
Diagonals, cords, etc.,
French printed challies,
Brocaded French sateens,
Scotch ginghams and crepes,
Fine zephyr ginghams,
French organdies,
Dotted Swisses, lawns, etc.,
Laces, embroideries, etc.

We import these fabrics by thousands, counting sorts; but about as little of any one sort as we can; only enough for one person sometimes.

The edict has gone forth that velvet will be used largely the coming season for puffed sleeves, revers and the pretty little Bolero, Figaro and Eton Jackets. We have

36 colors and shades at $1.00
33 colors and shades at 1.25
67 colors and shades at 1.50
22 colors and shades at 2.00

and we don't know how many from $2.50 to $5. Black velvets are of many grades, $1 to $5.

Only the amount of business done at this counter warrants the keeping of so great an assortment—it is unusual.

A number of new and elegant black dress fabrics have just been received at prices from 50 cents to $1.50; and black, it is said, will enter more largely into fashionable dress this season than ever before.

All sorts of fancy weaves:

RUPTURE.

J. A. SHERMAN, HERNIA SPECIALIST, respectfully notifies the public, especially the many who have called at his New York office during his absence, that he has returned from his European office, London, England, where his successful treatment and the marvelous cures resulting from it received the approbation of the most eminent surgeons in Europe.

His fame soon spread, crowding his London office with the victims of Hernia anxious for relief. Patients who had endured long years of suffering came to consult him from India, Russia, Germany, Belgium, France and other countries. The remarkable cures made in London of chronic cases of patients, who had been at the various hospitals and under the care of the most eminent English surgeons without obtaining relief, consulted J. A. Sherman, and were at once relieved and eventually restored to a state of soundness through his method, to the astonishment of the eminent surgeons who had formerly treated them. In the case of Mr. Henry James, who had been a great sufferer for over twenty years, his wonderful and complete cure was certified to by that distinguished surgeon and operator on rupture at Kings College Hospital, John Wood, F.R.S., F.R.C.S., F.R.C., also Dr. Edward Bellamy, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to Charing Cross Hospital, etc., Sir Henry Thompson, Surgeon at University College, London, and others.

J. A. Sherman's extensive practice in the treatment of Hernia in its various forms with a success unparalleled in all previous ages, is of the highest value to those who are afflicted with rupture and hope to be once more sound. In J. A. Sherman's treatment there is no operation or restriction from labor, while there is relief from the torment and injury of wearing trusses and security from that terrible condition known as strangulated rupture, to which every victim of Hernia is daily subject. His book of information and indisputable proofs is mailed to those who send 10 cents. His book of photographic likeness, showing the condition of patients before and after treatment and cure, is sent by express on receipt of 25 cents. Call on or address

I thought that I had won her heart,
That she was mine alone;
No more would rivals rouse my fears,
Henceforth her love I'd own.

For she had asked in tender tones,
In which true love sighs were,
If I my latest photograph
Would kindly give to her.

Deceitful wretch! she gave it to
The maid that cleans the halls.
But first she wrote upon the back:

THERE IS HARDLY ANYTHING prettier to look at than a neat house newly painted—with good paint. Poor paint won't stand inspection, you know, and your friends can tell the difference between common paints and the best the moment they see it. There is neither harm nor disgrace in being economical, of course, but it is false economy to buy common paint. In the first place it never has a satisfactory appearance, and secondly it is not durable. Again, poor paint won't go half as far as the same quantity of Chilton Paints. The latter are manufactured with care from the best materials procurable, without regard to cost. The aim is to make the Chilton Paints universally known as the best and most reliable. ## Golden Words of Truth

We Have Our Pastors' Assurance of These Facts.

The Word of Ministers Taken as the Strongest Proof.

Persons Believe the Pastor Before Any One Else in the World.

There are no words so strong as those spoken by the true minister of the gospel. One knows and feels instinctively that such words come from the heart and are prompted only by the earnest purpose of doing good to humanity.

We do not wonder, therefore, at the great influence with the public of the strong and ringing words of praise which the eminent divine, Rev. C. D. B. Meacham, gives that most wonderful of medicines, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. When he was run down in health, weak in nerves, prostrated in strength, and with his blood badly impaired, he was restored to sound and vigorous health by this marvelous health renewer.

Here are the exact facts in his own words:

"I am very glad to say in regard to Dr. Greene's great remedy that when my blood was badly impoverished by an old scrofula humor, and my nervous system was greatly impaired, Dr. Greene's medicine gave me wonderful relief.

"At the present time my health is as good as at any time in my life, and my confidence in Dr. Greene's remedy is constantly increasing." REV. C. D. B. MEACHAM,
Pastor Baptist Church, Townshend, Vt.

Doubtless the same heartfelt sympathy and great desire to see the sick made well inspired the Rev. Dr. J. W. Walker, Presiding Elder of the Methodist church, Fort Dodge, Ia., to also recommend Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy to the sick and suffering. He, too, has used it himself; he, too, knows that it cures, that it is sure to make the sick well if they use it.

"I have given Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy a fair test, and am free to say that I consider it rightly named. I have recommended its use to several."
REV. J. W. WALKER, Presiding Elder,
Fort Dodge, Ia.

We have published the testimonials of vast numbers of people who were cured by the use of the great discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, but we take more pleasure in giving to the world Rev. Mr. Meacham's own words and those of Rev. Mr. Walker in regard to the wonderful benefits they received from this valuable remedy, because we realize that the earnest words of a minister will have great weight with sufferers from disease, and everybody who reads their convincing words in regard to the sure and remarkable curative powers of this medicine will lose no time in securing a bottle, and thus obtain a cure.

Above all, use this great remedy in the spring, for it is the best spring medicine in the world. Almost everybody needs to use a spring medicine to invigorate the blood, strengthen the nerves and start up a healthy action of the liver, kidneys and bowels. Be sure and use Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is purely vegetable and perfectly harmless, and is kept by all druggists at $1.

Its discoverer is the well-known Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who gives consultation and advice free to the sick, personally or by letter. The sick should use immediately Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, for it is not only the best remedy ever discovered, but those using it have the privilege of consulting Dr. Greene, personally or by letter, concerning its effects, their health, etc. This fact alone guarantees the assurance of cure. If you need a medicine do not fail to take this best of all remedies.

NEVER.

While Murat was in Madrid he was anxious to communicate with Junot in Portugal, but all the roads to Lisbon swarmed with guerrillas and with the troops composing Castanos's army.

He asked Krasinski, the commandant of the lancers, to find him a brave and intelligent young man. Two days afterward the commandant brought the prince a young man of his corps, for whom he pledged his life. His name was Leckinski, and he was but 18 years old.

Murat was moved at seeing a so young a man court so imminent a danger, for if he were detected his doom was sealed. Murat could not help remarking to the Pole the risk he was about to run. The youth smiled.

"Let your imperial highness give me my instructions," answered he respectfully, "and I will give a good account of the mission I have been honored with."

The young prince augured favorably from the young man's modest resolution. The Russian embassador gave him his dispatches; he put on a Russian uniform and set out for Portugal.

The first two days passed over quietly, but on the afternoon of the third Leckinski was surrounded by a body of Spaniards, who disarmed him and dragged him before their commanding officer. Luckily for the gallant youth it was Castanos himself.

Leckinski was aware that he was lost if he were discovered to be a Frenchman; consequently he determined on the instant not to let a single word of French escape him, and to speak but Russian and German, which he spoke with equal fluency. The cries of rage of his captors announced the fate which awaited him, and the horrible murder of General Rene, who had perished in the most dreadful tortures but a few weeks before as he was going to join Junot, was sufficient to freeze the very blood.

"Who are you?" said Castanos in French, which language he spoke perfectly well, having been educated in France.

Leckinski looked at the questioner, made a sign and answered in German, "I do not understand you."

Castanos spoke German, but he did not wish to appear personally in the matter and summoned one of the officers of his staff, who went on with the examination. The young Pole answered in Russian or German, but never let a single syllable of French escape him. He might, however, easily have forgotten himself, surrounded as he was by a crowd eager for his blood, and who waited with savage impatience to have him declared guilty—that is, a Frenchman—to fall upon him and murder him.

But their fury was raised to a height which the general himself could not control, by an incident which seemed to cut off the unhappy prisoner from every hope of escape. One of Castanos' aides-de-camp, one of the fanatically patriotic who were so numerous in this war, and who from the first had denounced Leckinski as a French spy, burst into the room, dragging with him a man wearing the brown jacket, tall hat and red plume of a Spanish peasant.

The officer confronted him with the Pole and said:

"Look at this man, and then say if it is true that he is a German or a Russian. He is a spy, I swear by my soul."

The peasant meanwhile was eyeing the prisoner closely. Presently his dark eye lighted up with the fire of hatred.

"Es, Frances, he is a Frenthman!" explained he, clapping his hands. And he stated that having been in Madrid a few weeks before he had been put in requisition to carry forage to the French barrack, and, said he, "I recollect that this is the man who took my load of forage and gave me a receipt. I was near him an hour and recollect him. When we caught him I told my comrade this is the French officer I delivered my forage to."

This was correct. Castanos probably discovered the true state of the case, but he was a generous foe. He proposed to let him pursue his journey, for Leckinski still insisted he was a Russian, and could not be made to understand a word of French. But the moment he ventured a hint of the kind a thousand threatening voices were raised against him and he saw that clemency was impossible.

"But," said he, "will you then risk a quarrel with Russia, whose neutrality we are so anxious for?"

"No," said the officer, "but let us try this man?"

Leckinski understood all, for he was acquainted with Spanish. He was removed and thrown into a room worthy to have been one of the dungeons of the inquisition in its best days.

When the Spaniards took him prisoner he had eaten nothing since the previous evening, and when his dungeon door was closed on him he had fasted for eighteen hours. No wonder then what with exhaustion, fatigue, anxiety, and the agony of his dreadful situation, that the unhappy prisoner fell almost senseless on his hard couch. Night soon closed in and left him to realize in its gloom the full horror of his hopeless situation. He was brave, of course, but to die at eighteen—'tis sudden. But youth and fatigue finally yielded to the approach of sleep and he was soon buried in profound slumber.

He had slept perhaps two hours when the door of his dungeon opened slowly and some one entered with cautious steps, hiding with his hand the light of a lamp. The visitor bent over the prisoner's couch, the hand that shaded the lamp touched him on the shoulder, and a sweet and silvery voice—a woman's voice—asked him, "Do you want to eat?"

The young Pole, awakened suddenly by the glare of the lamp, by the touch and words of the female, rose up on his couch, and with eyes only half opened said in German, "What do you want?"

"Give the man something to eat at once," said Castanos, when he heard the result of the first experiment, "and let him go. He is not a Frenchman. How could he have been so far master of himself? The thing is impossible."

But though Leckinski was supplied with food he was detained a prisoner. The next morning he was taken to a spot where he could see the mutilated corpse of the Frenchman, who had been cruelly massacred by the peasantry of Truxillo, and he was threatened with the same death. But the noble youth had promised not to fail, and not a word, not an accent, not a gesture or look betrayed him.

Leckinski, when taken back to his prison, hailed it with a sort of joy. For twelve hours he had had nothing but gibbets and death in its most horrid forms before his eyes—exhibited to him by men with the looks and passions of demons. He slept, however, after the harrassing excitement of the day, and soundly, too, when in the midst of his deep and deathlike slumbers the door opened gently, some one drew near his couch, and the same voice whispered in his ear:

"Arise and come with me. We wish to save your life. Your horse is ready."

And the brave young man, hastily awakened by the words, "We wish to save your life; come," answered still in German, "What do you want?"

Castanos when he heard of this experiment and its result, said the Russian was a noble young man; he saw the true state of the case.

The next morning early four men came to take him before a sort of court martial, composed of officers of Castanos's staff. During the walk they uttered the most horrible threats against him, but true to his determination he pretended not to understand them.

When he came before his judges he seemed to gather what was going on from the arrangements of the tribunal and not from what he heard said around him, and he asked in German where his interpreter was. He was sent for, and the examination commenced.

It turned at first upon the motive of his journey from Madrid to Lisbon. He answered by showing his dispatches to Admiral Siniavin and his passport. Spite of the presence and the vehement assertions of the peasant, he persisted in the same story and did not contradict himself once.

"Ask him," said the presiding officer at last, "if he loves the Spaniards, as he is not a Frenchman?"

"Certainly," said Leckinski, "I like the Spanish nation, and I esteem it for its noble character. I wish our two nations were friends."

"Colonel," said the interpreter to the president, "the prisoner says that he hates us because we make war like banditti; that he despises us, and his only regret is that he cannot unite the whole nation in one man, to end this war in a single blow."

While he was saying this, the eyes of the whole tribunal were attentively watching the slightest movement of the prisoner's countenance, in order to see what effect the interpreter's treachery would have upon him. But Leckinski had expected to be put to the test in some way, and was determined to baffle all their attempts.

"Gentlemen," said Castanos, "it seems to me that this young man cannot be suspected; the peasant must be deceived. The prisoner may pursue his journey, and when he reflects on the hazard of our position he will find the severity we have been obliged to use excusable."

Leckinski's arms and dispatches were returned, he received a free pass, and thus this noble youth came victorious out of the severest trial that the human spirit can be put to.—H. K., in New York News.

Cures Others

Will cure You is a true statement of the action of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, when taken for diseases originating in impure blood; but, while this assertion is true of AYER'S Sarsaparilla, as thousands can attest, it cannot be truthfully applied to other preparations, which unprincipled dealers will recommend and try to impose upon you as "just as good as Ayer's." Take AYER'S Sarsaparilla and AYER'S only, if you need a blood purifier and would be benefited permanently. This medicine, for nearly fifty years, has enjoyed a reputation and made a record for cures that has never been equaled by other preparations. AYER'S Sarsaparilla eradicates the taint of hereditary scrofula and other blood diseases from the system, and it has, deservedly, the confidence of the people.

AYER'S
Sarsaparilla

"I cannot forbear to express my joy at the relief I have obtained from the use of AYER'S Sarsaparilla. I was afflicted with kidney troubles for about six months, suffering greatly with pains in the small of my back. In addition to this my body was covered with pimply eruptions. The remedies prescribed failed to help me. I then began to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla, and in a short time the pains ceased and the pimples disappeared. I advise every young man or woman, in case of sickness resulting from impure blood, no matter how long standing the case may be, to take AYER'S Sarsaparilla."—H. L. Jarmann, 33 William street, New York city.

YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest, — it is well expended, — you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

When you have a suit of clothes made in proper style, and in the proper way, it is money invested,—as it should be. That is the way we make clothes — in proper style, and in the proper way.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS' SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE
18 Months in Springfield.

DRS. SCOTT AND MAYNARD, THE EMINENT MAGNETIC AND SCIENTIFIC SPECIALISTS, PERMANENTLY LOCATED AT HOTEL GILMORE.

There is a sure relief for the sick and suffering in magnetism when all other means and medicines fail to do any good. Drs. Scott and Maynard, at Hotel Gilmore, are the fortunate dispensers of this wonderful remedial agent, and in the 18 months they have been located in Springfield have achieved an unequaled reputation in the treatment and cure of those long-standing chronic cases which distress and destroy humanity. Among the large and growing numbers that have been cured or very greatly relieved may be named:—

Mr. C. H. Joy of Shelburne, cured of a terrible sore, which had been pronounced by several physicians to be cancerous; healed in ten magnetic treatments. Mrs. Daniel C. Shehan, falling of the womb, complicated by chronic neuralgia and hemorrhodal tumors; cured in seven treatments. Frank La Voicier, bad case of skin disease, and suffered severely from dyspepsia; completely recovered and skin made as smooth as a baby's in five treatments; indigestion likewise is entirely relieved. Mr. Edward Taylor, who has suffered for 15 years with catarrh of the bladder and stricture, so that he was compelled to use an instrument three times a day to void the urine; he has been thoroughly cured by Drs. Scott and Maynard in less than four weeks.

There is no denying the fact that the doctors at Hotel Gilmore are making some of the most remarkable cures ever known in Springfield. Their patients come from all parts of the country and suffer from all forms of chronic disease. Consultation, examination and advice free and private. ### The Boys.

"The boys are coming home to-morrow,"
Thus our rural hostess said,
While Lou and I shot flitting glances,
Full of vague, unspoken dread.

Had we hither come for quiet,
Hither fled the city's noise,
But to change it for the turmoil
Of those horrid country boys?

Waking one with wild hallooing,
Early every summer day,
Shooting, robbing, teasing kittens,
Frightening the wrens away.

Stumbling over trailing dresses,
Thumbing volumes gold and blue,
Clamoring for sugar dainties,
Tracking dust the passage through.

These, and other kindred trials,
Fancied we, with woeful sigh,
"Oh, those horrid boys to-morrow!"
Sadly whispered Lou and I.

* * * * * * *

I wrote those lines one happy summer,
To-day I smile to read them o'er,
Remembering how full of terror
We watched all day the open door!

They came, "the boys," six feet in stature,
Graceful, easy, polished men!
I vowed to Lou, behind my knitting,
I'd trust no woman's word again.

For boyhood is a thing immortal
To every mother's heart and eye,
And sons are boys to her forever—
Change as they may to you and I.

To her no time comes, sharply marking
Whither or when their childhood went,
Nor when the eye-glass sharply turned
Leveled at last, then downward bent.

Now by the window, still and sunny,
Warmed by the rich October glow,
The dear old lady sits and watches,
Just as she watched three years ago.

For Lou and I are now her daughters,
We married those two country boys
In spite of all our sad forebodings
About their awkward ways and noise.

Lou springs up now to meet a footfall,
I list no more for coming feet,
Mother and I are waiting longer
For steps on Beulah's golden street!

But when she blesses Lou's beloved,
And seals it with a tender kiss,
I know that loving words go upward,
Words to another world than this.

Always she speaks in gentle fashion
About "my boys"—she always will—
Though one is gray; and one has vanished
Beyond the reach of time or ill.

ON THE BATTLEFIELD.

Charley Wallbridge lay awake listening to the patter of Virginia rain on the worn and veteran canvas, to its drip in the full trench along the hut's side, to the regular breathing of his comrade, Private Bader, to the stamping of horses on the corduroy floor of Company K's stables, and the sq-uusy of the stable guard's boots on his muddy round.

Toward morning, as the dark deepened, and Charley could hardly make out the dull white of his carbine and sabre against the mud-plastered chimney at the hut's end, he fancied he heard a low rattle of distant musketry out where he had tried to descry the steeples of Petersburg through the mist of the previous evening.

A month with the Fifty-third Pennsylvania veteran volunteer cavalry had not quite disabused our young recruit of his schoolboy notion that the men of the army of the Potomac, even in winter quarters, must live constantly within sound of the picket-line.

The boy was very miserable. His bones ached for the billowy feathers at home. Should he ever again undress for bed, he wondered, and sink away, unchafed and uncompassed by rough, stiff garments, to sleep? He pitied himself, thinking how his mother would cry if she could see him crouched so dreary in that drizzling March morning, pressed all the more into loneliness by the regular breathing of Bader—old veteran Bader—in their difference of deep sleep.

Into the vision of home came his gray-haired father's tired face, and little Harry's and Mary's and little Jane's, and the round cheeks of the growing baby. It was no use; this cavalryman of sixteen, whose one sense of sin was in the recollection that he had passed himself off for eighteen at the recruiting office in Philadelphia, shed some tears at the thought of the baby. Then he turned an ashamed face suspiciously toward his partner, for Charley would not have had the old soldier witness his breakdown for all the world.

Now came another gust from Petersburg, and this, Charley was almost certain, carried the crackle of rifle-firing on its wings.

"Bader! Bader!" he said. "Bader!"

"Can't you keep still, you Wallbridge?" came Orderly Sergeant Graveley's voice from the next hut of saplings and canvas.

"What's wrong with you, Charley?" asked Bader, turning to him.

"I thought I heard heavy firing out on the picket line; twice now I thought so."

"Oh, I guess not. The Johnnies won't come out such a night as this. Keep quiet, or you'll have Sergeant Graveley down on you. Better lie down and try to sleep, buddy; the bugle will call morning soon now."

Again Charley fell into his reverie of home. It was again the evening when his mother, folding her spectacles, told him, with an air of having considered what to say, that they might soon have to move away to the West. Their father's business in his little store had not prospered. Some notes were coming due, and he had not the money to pay them, continued until the holders would continue them no longer.

Jack, the elder son, had gone away to seek his fortune, and nothing had been heard from him since the war began.

In this situation something must be done, and the father, in the sober account of the matter he had given the children, had declared that if he had not been lame he would have taken the bounty and volunteered, to give his family something to start on after the store was gone.

It was this which sent Charley so young to the war, though he had long desired to enlist. Three boys not much older than he had already entered the army. It was his duty, he thought, not only to his country but to his family, to volunteer. The combined Federal, state and city bounties paid his father's notes in that last dreadful winter before Richmond fell.

"All would be well with the business now, if only Jack would find his way home," wrote Mr. Wallbridge, "but oh, my dear son Charley, you have saved us at a fearful risk, and laid upon us a heavy load of woe."

As the boy thought it all over, the darkness was turning to gray, and carbine and sabre came out more and more clearly above the ashes in the mud-plastered fireplace. The chill of dawn crept into the hut, and for a time wind and rain ceased.

The quiet deepened: even the drip from the old canvas had stopped. Charley Wallbridge, tired of listening and soothed by the silence, was falling asleep. Suddenly a heavy weight seemed to fall far away—then another—another. The fourth had a rumble of a clap of distant thunder, and a concussion of air seemed to follow.

"Hey! Big guns! What's up toward City Point?" said Bader, sitting up. "I tell you they're at it! It can't be so far away as Butler. What, on the left, too? That was toward Hatcher's Run, Charley. The Confederates are out in earnest. I guess you did hear the pickets trying to stop 'em. What a morning! Ha! Fort Fury! See that!" The outside world was dimly lighted up for a moment. In the intensified darkness that followed Bader's voice was drowned by the crash of a great gun from the neighboring fort.

"The Johnnies must have got in close somehow!" cried Bader. "Hey, Sergeant?"

"Yes!" shouted Graveley. "Scooped up the pickets and supports, too, in the rain, I guess. Turn out, boys! turn out and get ready for a wild day! Kid! Where's the Kid? Kid Sylvester!"

"Here! All right, Barney! I'll be out in a jiffy," answered the bugler.

"Hurry, then! I can hear the Colonel shouting already. Man, listen to that!" Four of Fury's guns crashed almost simultaneously.

"Turn out, Company K!" shouted Lieutenant Miller, running down from the officers' quarters. Where's the commissary sergeant? There? All right! Give out feed right away! Get your oats, men, and feed instantly! We may have time. Ha! Here's the General's orderly!"

As the trooper galloped across the parade-ground, his horse's hoofs flinging back great chunks of mud, a group of officers ran out behind the Colonel from the center of the high hedge of faded pine saplings screening the officers' quarters.

The orderly gave the Colonel but a word, and, wheeling, was off again as "boot and saddle" blared out from the buglers, who had now gathered at regimental headquarters.

"But leave the bits out; let your horses feed!" cried the lieutenant, running down again. "We're not likely to march till further orders."

In the cloudy sky the cannonade rolled about; it was broad day, but still so dull that long, wide flashes of flame sprang far out before every report from the guns of old Fury, and in the haze but few of the shells, shrieking along their high curve, could be seen bursting over Hancock's cheering men.

Indistinguishably blent were the sounds of hosts on the move, field guns pounding to the front, troops shouting, the clink and rattle of metal, officers calling, bugles blaring, drums rolling, mules screaming—all heard as a running accompaniment to the cannon.

"Fhwat sinse in the ould man boddering us?" grumbled Corporal Kennedy, an old Fenian dragoon from the British army. "Sure, isn't it as plain as the—and faith, itself's not plain this dirthy mornin—that' there's no work for cavalry this day, barrin' it's escorting the doughboys prisoners, if they take any—bad 'cess to the job! Sure, it's an infantry fight and must be, wid the field guns plisintly helpin,' and the siege artillery booming away over the throops in the mud betwigst our own bristworks and the inner line of our forts."

"Oh, by this and by that," the corporal grumbled on. "Gineral Lee's not the gentleman I tuk him for at all, discomforting us in the rain, and yesterday being an illigant day for fightin'."

"Hoo-ow! did you hear them yell? Fhwat? Who'd a thought it possible? Byes! Bader! Charley! Look at the Johnnies swarmin' up the face of Fort Fury!"

Off there Charley could dimly see, rising over the near horizon made by tents, a straggling rush of men up the deep slope, while a thrill "hi-yi!" came from a multitude behind on the level ground that was hidden from the place occupied by the Fifty-third.

Literally in the next moment the force mounting Fury's glacis melted away, some rolling, some running and stumbling in heaps; then a tremendous musketry and field gun fire growled to and fro under the heavy smoke round and about and out in front of the fort, which had never ceased its regular discharge over the heads of its defenders and immediate assailants.

Suddenly Charley noted a slackening of the battle. It soon dropped away to nothing, and now there was no sound of small arms in any direction in the lengthening intervals of reports from the siege guns far and near.

In ten minutes the Fifty-third had formed in close column of companies. The Colonel had galloped down at them and once along their front; then the command, forming fours from the right front, moved off at a trot through the mud in long procession.

"Didn't I know it?" said Kennedy. "It's escortin' the doughboys' prisoners, that's all we're good for this outrageous day. Police duty! Faix, I might as well be wid Her Majesty's dhragoons thramplin' down the flesh and blood of me in poor Ouild Oireland."

Charley heard without heeding. Now they were upon the red clay of the morning fight, brought to halt in open column by the completion of an evolution.

After a little they moved off in fours and dropping into single file surrounded some thousands of disarmed men, the remnant of the desperate brigades that Lee had flung through the departing night across three lines of breastworks at the great fort they had so nearly stormed.

Poor, drenched, shivering Confederates! There they stood, not a few in blue overcoats, but mostly in butternut, generally tattered; some barefoot, some with feet bound in ragged sections of blanket, many with toes and skin showing through crazy boots lashed on with strips of cotton or with cord, many, stoutly on foot, streaming blood from head wounds.

Charley, brought to the halt, faced half round in the saddle, and looked with quick beatings of pity far and wide over the disorderly crowd of weather-worn men.

"It's a Louisiana brigade," said Bader.

"Fifty-three P. V. V. C." spoke a prisoner as if in reply, reading the letters about the little crossed brass sabres on the Union hats. "Say; is you-uns from Pennsylvany?"

"Yes, Johnny, we come down to wake up Dixie."

"I reckon we-uns got the start at wakin' you-uns this mornin," said the Southerner. "But, say, ther's one of we-uns lyin' dyin' over yonder; his folks lives in Pennsylvany. Mebbe some of you-uns 'ud know 'em."

"What's his name?" asked Bader.

"Wallbridge—Johnny Wallbridge."

"Why, Charley—hold on! You ain't the only Wallbridges there are. What's up?" cried Bader, as the boy half-reeled, half-clambered from his horse.

"Hold on, Charley!" cried Corporal Kennedy.

"Halt there, Wallbridge!" shouted Sergeant Graveley.

"Stop that man," roared Lieutenant Miller.

"But," calling, "He's my brother!" Charley, catching up his sabre as he ran followed the Southerner, who had instantly divined the situation.

The forlorn prisoners made way for them, closing in behind, stretched round in solid array about the scene.

"It's not Jack," said the boy. But something in the look of the dying man drew him on to kneel in the mud.

"Is it you, Jack? Oh, now, I know you well! Jack, I'm Charley! Don't you know me? I'm Charley! your brother Charley."

The southern soldiers stared rigidly at the boy, seeming to grow paler with the recollections that he struggled for.

"Not Charley," he shrieked, hoarsely. "No, Charley's only a little fellow!"

He paused and looked meditatively into the boy's eyes. "It's nearly five years I've been gone. He was nearly twelve then. Boys," lifting his head painfully and casting his look slowly round his comrades, "I know him by the eyes—yes, he's my brother! Let me speak to him alone. Stand back a bit."

The men pushed backward into the form of a wide circle.

"Put down your head, Charley. Kiss me! Kiss me again! How's mother? Ah I was afraid she might be dead! Don't tell her I'm dead, Charley."

He groaned with the pain of the groin wound.

"Closer, Charley, I've got to tell you this first. Maybe it's all I've time to tell. Say, Charley, they oughtn't to have killed me, the Union soldiers oughtn't. I never fired—high enough—all these years. They drafted me, Charley—tell mother that—down in New Orleans, and I couldn't get away.

"Ai-ai! How it hurts! I must die as soon as I can tell you. I wanted—to come home—three years ago—and help father. How's poor father, Charley. Doing well now? Oh, I'm glad—of that; and the baby? There's a new baby! I'll never—see it—Charley."

His eyes closed, and he lay almost smiling happily as his brother's tears fell on his muddy and blood-clotted face. As if from a trance his eyes opened anxiously.

"You'll be sure—to tell them—I was drafted, conscripted, and I never fired at any of us—of you—tell all the boys, too."

Again the flame of life went down, and again flickered up for utterance.

"Well, there's this," he went on, "don't ever—hate—my chums—we-uns. They've been as good and kind, marching, wet and cold together, and it wasn't their fault. If they had known—how I wanted—to be shot—for the Union! It was so hard—to be—on the wrong side! But—"

He lifted his head, and staring wildly at his brother, gasped out once more:

"Mind, I never fired high enough!"

Then he lay still in Charley's arms, breathing fainter and fainter till no motion was on his lips nor in his heart, nor any tremor in his hand.

"Come, Charley," said Bader, stooping tenderly to the boy. "The order is to march. He's past helping now. It's no use, you must leave him here to God. Come, boy, the head of the column is moving now."

Mounting his horse Charley looked across to Jack's form. For the first time in three years the famous Louisana brigade trudged on without their unwilling comrade. There he lay, alone, in the Union lines, under the rain, his marching done, a figure of eternal peace, while Charley, looking backward till he could no longer distinguish his dead brother from the clay of the field, rode on and on beside the downcast procession of men in gray.—Youth's Companion.

JEM BRIGGS'S FIND.

The other day I met on Kearney street an old-time Washoe acquaintance called Jem Briggs, whose usually well-worn miner's appearance was on this occasion replaced by a gorgeous display of velvet vest, check pants, red scarf and ponderous watch chain, while his honest and simple face shown above these evidences of prosperity with the placid contentment of a full harvest moon.

"Hello, Jem," I said, "glad to see you looking so prosperous. Must have struck it rich."

"So I have," said Jem, and then, as his tanned face saddened a little, he continued, "but I had a mighty tough loss, though. My partner, Ned Bimber—you remember Ned—has gone up the shaft."

"Dead, eh?"

"Yes; I'll tell you how it was. You see, Ned and I had a quarrel about two years ago. Don't matter now what it was all about. Mebbe Ned was wrong and mebbe I was, but all the same, neither of us would back down; coupl'er fools, you'll say, so we were; and the upshot was that we parted, and agreed never to speak to each other again."

"And didn't you?"

"No, sir; more shame for us, as we had been pards, thick and thin, for fifteen years together. Well, about six months after that Ned got a good gravel claim up on the Feather, where they've been turning the river bed, and he struck it rich—cleaned up nigh on to $250,000 in three months."

"And how were you getting on?"

"Oh, clean broke. Working up at Gold Hill for three dollars a day. Well, I was kinder sneakin' glad to hear of Ned's luck, for all we were outs; but the next thing I heard was that he had been killed by the bank's caving in on him. He lived just long enough to make his will. Well, the lawyers wrote as how Ned was worth just about $220,000, and the will gave $5000 to each of three distant cousins of his'n—they had all come out from the East when they heard of Ned's find—and the same amount to me, mind you, just as though we hadn't quarreled. But Ned allers was a 'centric sort of cuss, and the bill provided that none of us should get the money if we attended the funeral. He didn't want any one at the funeral only the undertaker. The will said he had 'lived lonely and wanted to be buried lonely.' Them's just the words, and I felt they were intended for me, sure. The disposition of the rest of the estate, about $200,000, was provided for in another codicil, to be opened the day after the funeral, but we all supposed it was donated to a charitable object, for Ned hadn't any kin 'ceptin' the cousins."

"You stayed away from the funeral?"

"That's just the point. Somehow I felt so miserable and downhearted that—you see, Ned was the onliest partner I ever had—that I determined to see him sent down on his last cage, anyway, money or no money, and I did."

"And the cousins?"

"None of 'em went. Fact is they were so disgusted with the 'divvy' that they cleared down to 'Frisco to see about breaking the will. So I was the only mourner at the funeral. My friends thought I was fit for the crazy house to throw away the $5000 like that—well, I just couldn't help it. It turned out though to be the best lead I ever struck."

"How was that?"

"Why; the next day, when the main will was opened, we found that it really gave the entire balance of the clean-up to whichever of us four disobeyed the condition of the $5000 bequests. So you see I came in for the whole lump just like a knife. And do you know, as sure as gun's iron, I shall allers believe that Ned put up the job a-purpose—cause he know'd I'd be thar!"—San Francisco Examiner.

A HINT TO PEOPLE WHO USE LAMPS.

Policemen and firemen are frequently called into private houses to put out exploding lamps or clothing that has caught fire from an accident of the kind. When a lamp is blazing ceiling high it requires considerable nerve to take hold of it and hurl it out of a window, but that is the simplest and best way to prevent disaster. If that is impossible, or if the burning oil has got on the carpet or table cover, a shovelful of sand, or failing sand, of common soil, will generally do all that is necessary."

The same applies to any one whose clothing is covered with oil and on fire. If he can lie down and have some soil shoveled on his clothes the fire will go out instantly, whereas a dozen buckets of water would hurt him much worse than the fire. A bucket of sand standing in a cupboard in a room where a coal oil lamp is burned is a good precaution, and may check at the start what might otherwise be a most disastrous fire.—Exchange.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

A SCHOOLROOM IDYL.

How plainly I remember all!
The desks, deep-scored and blackened,
The row of blackboards 'round the wall,
The hum that never slackened;
And, framed about my map and chart,
And casts of dusty plaster,
That wisest head and warmest heart,
The kindly old schoolmaster!

I see the sunny corner nook
His blue-eyed daughter sat in,
A rosy, fair-haired girl, who took
With us her French and Latin.
How longingly I watched the hours
For Allendorf and Cæsar!
And how I fought with Tony Powers
The day he tried to tease her!

And when, one day, it took the "Next!"
To stay some Gallic slaughter,
Because I quite forgot the text
In smiling at his daughter,
And she and I were "kept till four,
To study, after closing."
We stopped the clock an hour or more
While he, poor man, was dozing!

And there he sits, with bended head,

PALMER NEWS.

About Town Officers.

The caucuses of both parties will be held early next week, and as yet there are several vacancies in the slate on both sides. As to selectmen the Republicans will probably nominate Mr. Twiss, one of the present board, and Charles T. Brainerd of this place, the third place still being in doubt. The Democrats are by no means united, and the town committee are not all of one mind. Mr. Twiss is opposed by some because in the granting of licenses last year he voted for three saloons in this village and the Nassowanno House did not get a license. A portion of the Democratic town committee are of the same mind, and the slate which they have prepared bears the name of John F. Hanifin of Bondsville, E. A. Buck of this village and John O. Hamilton of the north part of the town. The other faction proposes to push the nomination of Mr. Twiss, and J. A. Hawkes of this village, and are not very particular as to the third man. A. L. Hills declines to be a candidate for assessor another year, and O. W. Studley and J. A. Palmer are mentioned among the Republicans, while the Democrats are said to be considering D. W. Mack and H. A. Northrop, it being generally conceded that Messrs. Smith and Bishop of the present board will receive both nominations. Mr. Merriam should be his own successor as overseer of the poor. He has done a good work in looking up and keeping records of all who came under the care of the board which will prove worth hundreds of dollars to the town in years to come. On the school committee the terms of Messrs. Breckenridge and Deming expire, and the resignation of Rev. Mr. Day makes the election of three necessary. Mr. Breckenridge will probably succeed himself. Among the possible new candidates are Rev. Mr. Blanchard of Thorndike and Dr. Smith of Bondsville, the latter having done previous good work on the board. W. A. Weld would like to collect the taxes of the town another year, and has done his work so well this year that there will probably be little objection. There is the customary talk of nominating a Democratic candidate for town clerk and treasurer, but probably no move will be made in this direction, as the present incumbent gives general satisfaction.

Some Town Figures.

The selectmen held their last meeting for the payment of bills on Monday, and now know about how the appropriations of the year are coming out. The expenses have been kept down to as low a point as possible, having in view always the future welfare of the town, and as a result there are many of the appropriations which will show a balance unexpended. The contingent account will show a balance of nearly $1000, although there are some old bills still to come in; the highway account will be overdrawn about $150 on account of the recent snow storms, which otherwise would have shown a balance as large the other way; there will be $100 or so left on the bridge account, and about as much on railings, while on sewers and culverts the balance will be nearly $200; the $500 appropriated for suppressing the illegal selling of liquor has not been disturbed. The selectmen report that there has been an unusual amount of bridge work this year, that nearly all the bridges of the town are in good condition, and that unless something unforeseen occurs the bridge work necessary to be done next year will not be very heavy.

The overseers of the poor have spent less money than last year by $219.56. The items are as follows: Poor not on town farm, $3830.92; poor on town farm, $1039.99; repairs, $160.29; state poor, $394.80; other towns, $215.75; tramp room, $207.39; total, $5849.44. The whole number supported at the town farm has been 15, the average being 12, and the average cost per week per person was $1.67, against $2.16 last year.

Electric Street Lights for All the Villages of the Town.

The residents of the other villages in the town have long looked with envious eyes upon the electric lights in this village, but as they were not taxed for their maintenance could not very well complain. The question of lighting the other villages of the town has often been discussed, but no good plan has been presented. Thorndike was at one time furnished with 100 lamp posts and kerosene lamps, but they have rather fallen into disuse and are now of but little account. A plan is now presented whereby all the villages of the town can be lighted, and by electricity. When the Palmer and Monson Electric Company has its new plant completed it will be in a condition to furnish such lights, and an article will appear in the warrant for the annual town meeting to see if the town will vote to raise and appropriate money for lighting the streets of the villages. The probable proposition will be to place in each village sixty-six of the 25-candle power incandescent street lamps, the lights of the Depot Village to remain as at present. For this service they will ask $5000 a year, which it is proposed to ask the town to pay. The town of Monson has these lights and is very much pleased with them. A slight canvass of sentiment has been made in the other villages, and nearly all are found to be in favor of the plan.

An Unprincipled Rascal.

The workings of a clever swindler which visited this place a couple of weeks or so ago have just come to light. He was a young man, well dressed and of good appearance, and pretended to represent an insurance company of Hartford, giving the name of the street on which the offices were located, and the number. His plan was to visit aged women and represent that for a payment of $25 down and $25 at a future time the company would insure them against sickness in the sum of $13 a week. The majority of his would-be victims were smart enough to know that no company would do business with persons of their age, especially at the rate offered, but he found one person favorably inclined to take hold, and as she had not the necessary $25 he kindly offered to insure her for $15. This was more than she possessed, and he finally came down to $8, which was paid him, it being every dollar the woman had. It is unnecessary to say that neither the agent nor the company has been heard from since.

Burglary at the State Primary School.

It was discovered yesterday morning that the room of the Boys' Improvement Club in one of the playhouses had been broken into during the night. The door had been pried open, books scattered about, a picture smashed, and a gun, pair of clippers, pair of shears, and a pair of cuffs and gold cuff buttons belonging to the supervisor, F. U. Wetmore, stolen. Tracks were found in the snow outside, and it was remembered that Charles Thompson and James Devine, former members of the institution, but now grown to man's estate, had been seen hanging about the place. The tracks led toward W. E. Fay's, where Thompson worked, a warrant was secured, and the two suspects arrested this morning, most of the stolen property being found in Thompson's room. In court they both pleaded guilty to the charge of larceny from a building, and were bound over to the May term of the superior court in the sum of $500 each.

February's Snow-fall.

The record which has been kept at the United States armory in Springfield shows that February of this year surpassed all corresponding months in the past 25 years in the amount of snow which fell. This year there were 45½ inches, while the nearest approach to it was in 1883, when 28½ inches fell. The average has been 16½ inches. Thus far this winter there have been 68 inches, the average for the 25 years being 66 2-3. In 1873-4 the fall was 107½ inches. The record the present year by months has been: November, 5 inches; December, 2⅞ inches; January, 14¾ inches; February, 45½ inches.

About four inches of very light snow fell Tuesday afternoon, and yesterday a high wind drove it and more into the roads which had been broken out, making many of them dangerous to travel again. The railroads suffered somewhat also, and on the New London Northern road a freight was stalled in a drift above Barrett's Junction yesterday forenoon for several hours.

A party of 20 from the Baptist church had a pleasant sleigh-ride Monday evening, calling on B. C. Davis in the south part of Belchertown. The closing reception of H. A. Holland's dancing class was held at the opera house last evening, and was a most enjoyable affair. Music was furnished by the Philharmonic Orchestra of Springfield.

Elisha B. Worrell of Boston is to give a talk in the opera house on the afternoon of Tuesday, March 13th, on "Food Products." Much valuable information will be given, and some of the best manufacturers will distribute souvenir packages of their products. Admission will be by ticket, which can be procured without charge of the leading grocers.

There are numerous sidewalks in the village which are in anything but a passable state on account of the accumulation of snow. The walks in front of some of the finest residences in the place more resemble sheep paths than sidewalks intended for the use of pedestrians, which does not speak well for owners or occupants. Complaint is also made that at the public library there is no provision made for teams getting up to the walk, those who come with horses being compelled to go to the corner of Pleasant street before they can get a clear sidewalk.

Some of the certificate-holders in the Union Endowment did not sell at the opportunity offered a few weeks ago, and to these the receiver has now sent notice that he is authorized by the court to pay a dividend. How much this will be is not stated, but the Boston papers announce it to be about 80 per cent, which would bring about $52.40 to the charter members here. Those who sold their certificates received only about $27 for them. By the way, none of the "busted" orders which had branches in this place, among them the Golden Grail and the Royal Ark, have yet declared dividends.

The tenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Flynt was pleasantly observed at their residence on Central street Monday evening. The presentation of reminders of the occasion were numerous, and included almost everything in tin, many of the articles being decidedly unique. Barr of Springfield was the caterer. Orrin Skinner, who will be remembered by the older residents of the place as having married a daughter of Dr. Davis of Three Rivers, has been arrested in Buffalo, N. Y., on the charge of swindling. It is stated that he is probably one of the best-known crooks in the United States, and his career has certainly been a checkered one. In 1863 he started a drug store in Springfield, failing in about five years. Then he studied law in the Columbia law school. He moved to Quincy, Ill., and married again, finally ruining his wealthy father-in-law by his transactions. He was a member of a law firm in Chicago, became interested in mining property and went to New York as manager of the offices there, where he was imprisoned by people whom he had swindled. Since then he has been several times behind the bars, and has only recently returned from a five-years' sentence in England.

Rosa A. Hitchcock of Brimfield was adjudged insane at the district court this morning, and was sent to the Homeopathic hospital at Westboro. John Delaney of Monson was fined $7 for disturbing the peace and placed on probation for drunkenness. The case of James Martin and Carrie Dixon for drunkenness and disturbing the peace was of more than ordinary interest. Martin and Gilbert Mumford came from Monson yesterday afternoon and took a jug of tanglefoot home with them. On the way they stopped and treated the Dixon woman, who started off with them. They brought up in the yard of Mr. Heery at North Monson, where both men fell out of the sleigh. They were helped in again and started along, when the woman fell out, and if she had not been seen would have frozen to death. An officer was sent for and Martin was found in the road in front of Flynt's store yelling like a loon, but Mumford had disappeared. Martin was fined $7 for disturbing the peace and placed on probation for drunkenness, while both cases against the woman were continued.

Rev. H. F. Moulton delivered his fourth lecture in the lecture room of St. Paul's last evening on "Universalism, Its Doctrine of Man." He began by remarking that Gladstone once said that "Man himself is the crowning wonder of creation, the study of his nature is the noblest the world affords." I. As to man's origin, the Universalist believes that he has been created in the image of God,—a spiritual, conscious, moral and personal being. II. In regard to the nature of man Universalism affirms that (1) it is composed of two elements, body and spirit, (2) and that his nature is undeveloped. III. The condition of man, according to our theology, (1) is not one of total depravity,—"wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of body and soul;" (2) only partially depraved, due to freedom of choice, inherited tendencies and environment. IV. Man needs, say our theologians, (1) to know the truth, (2) salvation from sin (3) the dynamics of a divine life, such as faith, hope, charity and righteousness. As the Universalist looks at man, recognizing his inward possibilities and opportunities for divine culture, he says with the sculptor, beholding a block of marble: "What a god-like beauty thou hidest."

Editor Journal:—On "State avenue," just across the river from this village, live several families who, because they happen to be located on that side of the river, are residents of the town of Monson. Some of them earn their living in that town, and some in Palmer. They pay taxes and vote in Monson, to be sure, but that is all. Their interests are in Palmer rather than there. They come here to church, to school and to market. All the money is spent here rather than in Monson, and I expect they would gladly be residents of this town in fact, as they are practically, if they could only drop the town line the other side of their property. I understand that hitherto their children have been permitted to attend our schools without charge, but that the school committee now insists that they must pay for their tuition, and as the Monson town fathers will not foot the bill the parents must pay it themselves, or send the children to the little district school located near Henry Rindge's, almost over to the quarry. Now this probably is all right legally and technically, but in view of all the circumstances it seems to some of us as though our authorities could perhaps afford to be a little lenient in the matter, and not insist too rigidly on the payment of tuition by the few scholars who may come from that neighborhood. SYMPATHY.

Thursday morning just after the 'bus with the high school scholars left the stable of H. Goselin, in going through a drift it tipped badly, and while the driver was stopping his horses it went over. The company broke up at 11 o'clock, regretting nothing only that the superintendent from this place was unable to be present, and that such pleasant hours pass so quickly.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 1, 1893.

It looks as if there would be a short contest over the attempt to repeal the law to limit liquor licenses. The bill was in the House calendar Thursday afternoon, and by motion of Mr. Malone of Greenfield it was made a special assignment for March 8. There was no objection and this indicates that both sides want the time for preparation. The liquor law committee has reported unanimously against establishing a minimum liquor license fee, and against taking the license vote by counties.

Speaker Barrett's eulogy of James G. Blaine was delivered Thursday afternoon in the hall of the House in the presence of the governor, lieutenant-governor, council and distinguished citizens. His mother was present in the members' gallery, and all the galleries were pretty well filled. There is no doubt that the speaker desired to deliver the eulogy as a matter of personal advantage to himself, but it is not likely that he will make much capital out of the affair, for he failed to rise to any inspiring height and his delivery did not show any marked capacity for the floor of Congress.

The burning of the Strafford county almshouse in New Hampshire, with all its attendant horrors,is likely to have a practical effect in Massachusetts, for the trustees of our state almshouse at Tewksbury have petitioned the Legislature for the means wherewith to erect fire-proof buildings instead of the wooden buildings now used. Any one who has seen the present long wooden structures can but realize that there is great danger for hundreds of lives if a fire should ever get under headway there.

When the abolition of Fast Day was under discussion, some people advised that Governor Russell take the matter into his own hands, as it was found he had the power to do, and practically abolish the day by refusing to issue any proclamation. But he could not very well have taken such a course after the representatives of the people in the Legislature had refused to pass the abolition bill. Hence is not surprising that he has decided, with the advice and consent of the council, to have the observance on the historic first Thursday of April, the same as usual. Then will be the chance of the friends of the day, by turning out to church, to show that they regard it at least in outward observance.

It looks as if there might be some movement, after all, on the part of the few assessment endowment corporations, to prevent their immediate annihilation by law, for a remonstrance against the passage of the Bennett bill has been received in the House. It is in print, which looks as if it were being circulated generally among these endowment orders, and the first signer of the remonstrance which has been received by the House is Nelson F. Bond of Fitchburg. Other Fitchburg citizens are joined with him. The remonstrance is too late to have any effect upon the insurance committee, for it has already reported the Bennett bill favorably in such a form as will lead to the immediate closing up of all the endowment orders which still survive the storm and stress of the past year. The committee is unanimous, which will make it all the harder for any opposition to succeed. They have also reported a bill to keep the Order of Tonti out of the state, for that is the only foreign company left, now that the Iron Hall has gone to pieces.

One of the great contests of the year will be between the electric and steam railroads over their grade crossings. Now the electric roads cross the steam roads at grade, just as horse car tracks do, but it is the contention of the steam road people that electric roads are essentially more like steam roads than like horse roads, and that no more grade crossings shall be permitted. The electric roads insist that with inventions which are at hand the danger can be reduced to a minimum, and that they can prevent a repetition of the serious accidents which have already occurred. It is probable that the grade crossing question is as much an occasion as a cause of the hostility now manifested, for the real trouble is in the fact that the electric roads are getting a great deal of business in the suburbs of Boston, and that the extensions of street car service which are seen in Fitchburg, Northampton, Quincy, Brockton and other places, are an indication of a marked change when local travel will be more by electricity, and the steam roads must rely more upon their through traffic for their profit.

It is expected that the labor committee will be very conservative this year, and that the labor element, so-called, will not get as many favors as it has in some years. A favorable report has been made on the bill of Mr. Moriarty of Worcester to make a day's work for a railroad man ten hours inside of a consecutive eleven, and the bill will be debated on March 9th, but there are four dissenters from the report—Senators Green of Belchertown and Burnham of Revere and Representatives Smith of Andover and Fuller of Ludlow.

The labor committee is unanimously against the bill of Mr. Melaven of Worcester to limit the hours of street railway employes to eleven in a consecutive twelve, and against making the work of employes of the fire departments in all cities consist of six days in seven, though the committee has reported a bill applying this principle to the Boston fire department.

The disposition of many members to cling to frequent elections and close responsibility to the people is seen in the strong vote of the House against the bill to fix the term of Boston common councilmen at three years, instead of one. LANDON.

NEIGHBORHOOD NOTES.

MONSON.

Sunday School Convention.

The annual meeting of the Massachusetts Sunday School Association of this district was held in the Congregational church last Friday. In the morning the pastor, Rev. F. S. Hatch, gave an address on "How can Sunday schools influence a community?" and the question, "What are we good for?" was discussed, followed by an address on "State works" by Rev. George H. Clarke of Chicopee, and an address on "Normal class work" by S. K. Smith of the School for Christian Workers. In the afternoon reports from the several schools were read, and E. F. Morris and Mr. Wheeler spoke on "The home department," and Mrs. Edith Smith read a paper on "Sunday school work," illustrated by the blackboard method by S. K. Smith. H. B. Knox of Palmer spoke on "The teacher's influence." In the evening there was a praise service, and Rev. S. F. Frost of Palmer spoke on "The Sunday school as an evangelistic agency."

Clarence Abbott, the 18-years-old son of Nelson S. Abbott, died Tuesday evening after a lingering illness of consumption. The funeral was yesterday, Rev. W. H. Marble officiating.

Some thought a new meat cart was started in town, but it only proved to be that butcher McFarlane had arranged a very unique cart to run through heavy drifts by using a large dry goods box bearing the name of "J. Wellington, New York."

Monson patrons of the American Express Company are much dissatisfied with the present charges and the service given. Under the Adams regime, which expired January 31st, goods came more promptly and the charges were more reasonable.

The Y. P. S. C. E. of the Congregational church will give an entertainment and social this evening in the chapel. The entertainment will consist of readings by Mrs. Grace Stuart Lynch of Los Angeles, Cal. Admission 25 cents; children under 15 years, 15 cents.

Miss Virginia Dox, who occupied the pulpit of the Congregational church last Sunday, gave a very interesting talk on her work in New Mexico among the Mexicans, showing the utter degradation into which they have fallen, and the work of the Educational Society in their behalf.

Last Tuesday evening about 35 friends of Mr. and Mrs. Omar Pease gathered at their home in honor of their tenth anniversay of their marriage. A very pleasant evening was spent and Mr. and Mrs. Pease were the recipients of an extension table, cover, easy chair and clock, as tokens of their good-will and esteem.

Has Monson changed for the worse? What's the meaning of all this gay life, especially at this Lenten season? Instead of our people attending church, behold the gaiety—entertainments of the theatrical order, dancing parties, card parties, tea parties, and many other attractions which could just as well be put off to another season.

At the school committee's room in Memorial Hall last Saturday Superintendent Wood had arranged specimens of the writing, moulding, drawing (free-hand) and other samples of the work done in the schools. One of the most interesting features was the original designs by the scholars, which showed great skill. Miss Wood deserves the heartiest commendation, as well as the teachers of the several schools, for the excellent showing made.

Just two dozen people from this place availed themselves of the fine sleighing last Friday evening to take a sleigh-ride to Ware. At 8.30 the following supper was served at the Mansion House:

The supper which was to have been given by the ladies of the Home Missionary Society Washington's Birthday was postponed on account of the storm till Wednesday of this week. A large number were present. General and Mrs. Washington were represented, and some very fine costumes of the "ancient days." Miss Flora Agard of Monson spent Sunday in town.

Mrs. Sumner Parker arrived home from Douglas Saturday.

Mrs. W. A. Janes has arrived home after a visit to relatives in New Hampshire and Boston.

A small audience greeted Miss Knox at the church Tuesday evening. A full house was expected, but owing to the condition of the roads there were only a few present.

WALES.

Notwithstanding the drifting snow some of the young people took a wood-team ride Tuesday night to a dance in Brimfield.

Superintendent Thompson has had about twenty men on the roads shoveling snow most of the week, and has hardly been able to keep them passable.

One of Landlord Royce's horses broke away from his hitching post Wednesday and ran to Stafford, about four miles. The sleigh was demolished, but no other damage was done.

William O. Underwood, the veteran wool sorter, has gone to Monson to work in the Reynolds mills. He has had large experience in this branch, and is considered a first-class hand.

Edward Sizer caught his right hand between the pulling mill rolls last Monday at the Excelsior mill, and the forefinger so badly hurt as to necessitate amputation at the knuckle joint. The second finger was badly torn, but will doubtless be saved. Drs. Chamberlain and Sawin of Brimfield did the surgical work.

A houseful of the neighbors and friends of Charles Davis and wife came in upon them Friday evening, Feb. 17, to remind them of their thirtieth wedding day. After a bountiful supply of refreshments had been served, Rev. Mr. Blackmer called the couple to order and presented them a silver cake basket and a purse of money, to which Mr. Davis very appropriately responded. The night was a snowy one, but a good time was enjoyed by all.

HOLLAND.

M. A. Towne of Worcester was snow bound during the storm of last week at his sister's, Mrs. F. B. Blodgett.

The wife of John Davis, who resides in the easterly part of the town, died February 10th, and was buried the Sunday following.

Monday of last week was a terrible day to be out, the worst of the season. The man who started on horseback with the mail for Brimfield did not get back to Holland that day. Tuesday the people turned out en masse and succeeded in opening some of the roads. Wednesday morning dawned on another fierce snow storm, filling the roads as badly as ever.

L. E. Ferry, who bought the hotel property in this town about two years and a half ago, has sold out to a man from Greenwich, who is to take possession very soon. Mr. F. has kept a first-class country hotel, and it is hoped his successor will do equally as well. Mr. Ferry will sell his hotel furniture, stock, horses, carriages, personal property, etc., at auction next Tuesday at 10 a. m.

William S. Wallis seems to be unfortunate with his horses. While hitching up a pair about three years ago he was seriously kicked by one of them, splitting his knee-pan open, confining him to his bed for several months and finally resulting in a stiff knee joint. One day recently while driving another pair one of them kicked him again, injuring his lame leg so that he is now confined to his house.

Friday evening, February 17th, a sociable was held at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Dimmock. The time was spent in social games by the young people, while the older portion of the assembly looked on approvingly. The genial host and hostess spared no pains in contributing to the comfort of the company present, which numbered between 30 and 40, some being kept away by the threatening appearance of the weather. Apples and confectionery were abundantly served to the guests, and all present seemed to enjoy the occasion with a keen relish. The usual plate was passed around for contributions, and a sum amounting to several dollars was received.

The Ladies Benevolent Society of the Congregational church met with Mrs. James Richards of Maple street Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The members of Newton Lodge, F. and A. M., gave a reception and supper to their lady friends at the lodge rooms last Friday evening, which was a most enjoyable affair.

Wesleyan Academy.

The winter term of Wesleyan Academy will close next Tuesday for a two weeks' vacation. The entertainments will be at Fisk Hall as follows: Friday evening, March 3, Athena open society; Saturday evening, cantata by the chorus class; examinations Monday and Tuesday; Monday evening, gymnastic exhibition by the classes in physical culture; Tuesday evening, closing reception.

An excellent entertainment was given in Fisk Hall Friday evening under the auspices of the Pieria society. Miss T. Lillian Howe read several selections with fine effect, notably the difficult poem, "King Robert of Sicily." Horace C. Carter, basso, of Springfield, was heard to good advantage, his magnificent voice being especially appreciated in the "Song of Hybrias," and in the duets with James Davis of Wesleyan, who is the tenor in the same choir of which Mr. Carter is a member. Frank Lindsey as pianist, and the Wesleyan Banjo Club also did some excellent work.

WARE.

Henry O. Caryl, who has been so severely sick, was more comfortable yesterday, but the disease has such a hold that there is but little to build hopes of his recovery upon.

The Methodist society is again at work soliciting subscriptions to build a new church, with quite good success. The matter had been given a rest for some months on account of the severe illness of the pastor, Rev. C. M. Hall.

The Ware Watch Jewel Holder Co. has sold the entire right to sell the jewel holders, the invention of F. R. Cunningham, to Ezra F. Bowman & Co. of Lancaster, Pa., for the space of two years. Sixty dozen were shipped to them this week.

The Ware Christian Workers have been notified that they must vacate the hall in Trench's block which they have occupied the past year and a half. It is now expected they will occupy the room in Sandford's block, formerly the old court room.

The Otis Company has rented the little room and window formerly occupied by J. R. Lawton in Marsh Bros.' store, where they will display a line of gas stoves and fixtures. It was supposed by some that there would be no further use for gas when electricity was introduced, but the consumption of gas has been constantly on the increase.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union suggests that an article be inserted in the warrant for town meeting to see if the town will appropriate the money received for licenses (if the town votes for license) or any part thereof, for the cure of the liquor habit for any who are unable to pay for themselves, and thus help to undo some of the terrible work done by the saloons.

A number of the Ware Christian Workers were going on Wednesday evening to the school house in the Deacon White district, West Brookfield, it being the anniversary of the commencement of holding meetings there, but word came just as they were ready to start that the roads were so badly drifted that they could not get through.

Sleigh-rides have been in order this week. The junior high school pupils of Palmer dined at the Mansion House Tuesday, and the high school pupils of Barre took supper at the Hampshire House. The overseers from Palmer mills and Three Rivers were at the Mansion House Wednesday evening, where they were met by the overseers of the Otis company, and supper was served.

The report of the water commissioners is to be printed with the town reports this year. They report that during the past year 1802 feet of mains, 3 hydrants, 5 gates, 49 services and 55 meters have been added to the construction. The total receipts, maintenance account, is $9014.91, and the expenditures $5450.67. This includes the interest on the water debt, making a net revenue of $3,464.24, to which, if the interest, $2305.24 be added, the revenue is $6769.58, or 6¾ per cent of the cost of construction, which is now $101,619.68.

At the parish meeting of the East Congregational church on Thursday afternoon the following officers were elected: Clerk, Henry K. Hyde; treasurer, D. W. Ainsworth; prudential committee, Charles E. Blood, M. L. Lane and W. S. Hyde; auditor, Abram Hyde. From the report of the treasurer it was estimated that there would be a small deficiency at the first of April. It was voted to continue the same method of raising money, by the free-will pledges and weekly payments by envelopes; also voted to raise the pastor's salary to $2,500.

Grade Crossings Abolished.

The dangerous "Gibbs" grade crossing on the road to Palmer, about three miles from Ware, is in the near future to be a thing of the past, it having been ordered that the highway shall pass under the tracks at a point about 200 feet south of the present crossing. The hearing by the committee appointed by the court, Judge Aldrich presiding, on the separation of the grades of the railroads and the highway was held at noon on Tuesday. The commissioners were George F. Tucker of New Bedford, who was chairman of the hearing, George A. Kimball of Somerville, civil engineer, and Lawson Sibley, ex-mayor of Springfield. The petition of the selectmen was presented by Lawyer Coney, attorney for the town. W. Hudson, attorney of the Boston and Albany railroad, called upon H. E. Gage, civil engineer of the road, who presented plans and gave a clear description of them, also giving an estimate of the cost, which was in detail as follows:

|---|---|
| 8800 cubic yards excavation | $2400.00 |
| 625 cubic yards masonry | 4375.00 |
| Two iron bridges | 1350.00 |
| Bridge floor and labor | 150.00 |
| Trestle and care of tracks | 1200.00 |
| | $9475.00 |
| Five per cent. added | 473.75 |
| Total | $9948.75 |

Mr. Bissell, chief engineer, and Mr. French, general road master of the Boston and Maine railroad, were present, and in behalf of their road accepted the plans presented by the Boston and Albany engineer, and directed him to proceed at once to get out plans and specifications for the work. The meeting was not a large one, few being present except the selectmen, road commissioners, and a few most interested citizens living near the crossing in question.

Admitted the Facts.

Newspaper editors have to be very careful in opening their columns for statements. But aware that the Dr. Miles Medical Co. are responsible we make room for the following testimonial from R. McDougall, Auburn, Ind., who for two years noticed a stoppage or skipping of the pulse, his left side got so tender he could not lie on it, his heart fluttered, he was alarmed, went to different doctors, found no relief, but one bottle of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure cured him. The elegant book, "New and Startling Facts," free at LeGro & Lynde's. It tells all about heart and nervous diseases and many wonderful cures. (3)

How to Become Fleshy.

I could not lie down to sleep, but now sleep perfectly easy, and am still improving wonderfully. Cannot say enough for the Nervine.—Mrs. L. B. Millard, Dunkirk, N. Y." "One customer used Nervine and gained fifteen pounds in flesh," say Brown & Maybury, Cortland, N. Y. Trial bottles and elegant book free at LeGro & Lynde's. (3)

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is unquestionably the best preservative of the hair. It is also curative of dandruff, tetter, and all scalp affections.

"I've tried all sorts of blood purifiers," said an old lady to a "cutter," "and you can't persuade me that any other Sarsaparilla is as good as Ayer's." That's where she had him. She knew that Ayer's was the best—and so did he, but it paid him better to sell a cheaper brand.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

A Justice of the Peace Says.

Hon. John Nealey, justice of the peace and exmember of the House of Representatives from Meredith, N. H., was for twelve years a terrible snfferer with rheumatism. He says: "I cannot obtain any medicine which does me so much good as your Sulphur Bitters, and I think it is the best medicine made."

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

Why Should I

Not have confidence in that which has done me a world of good? If you had suffered years with liver complaint and got cured by using Sulphur Bitters, would you not, oo, have confidence in them? J. R. Nash, Hotel Winthrop, Boston.

People with delicate stomachs find Ayer's Sarsaparilla agreeable to the taste, and, therefore, prefer it as a blood purifier to any other. This is one reason for its great popularity as a spring and family medicine. Safe, certain and palatable.

Secretary Windom's

Last Words Should be Read by All who Value Good Health and Happiness.

Secretary Windom, in his last speech, delivered in New York city before the leading financial men of this country, said "that poison in the blood permeates arteries, veins, nerves, brain and head, and speedily brings paralysis and death." He but issued a warning that should be heeded by every person, old and young. It is impossible for the human body to grow strong and vigorous with deadly poison lurking there.

Science has given us a corrective in the form of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which will cleanse the blood of all impurities and restore the weak and debilitated system to health and vigor.

Mrs. Annie Barton, Catskill, N. Y., says, "It is the best medicine I have ever known for purifying the blood, for it cured my husband of running ulcers of the leg when skilled physicians failed to do him any good."

From the common face pimple to that most dreaded of all skin diseases, scrofula, it is the master of, and will cure, the most stubborn cases. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is not a new decoction recently put on the market, but an old and tried medicine, and is the household remedy in nearly every home in the eastern states for the cure of kidney and liver complaint, salt rheum, erysipelas, rheumatism, and all the ills that are brought about by impure blood.

Mr. John R. Stephenson of Albany, N. Y., writes that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a wonderful medicine, and for sick or bilious headache or derangement of the stomach it has no equal on the face of the earth.

THE NEXT MORNING I FEEL BRIGHT AND NEW AND MY COMPLEXION BETTER. My doctor says it acts gently on the stomach, liver and kidneys, and is so pleasant to take. This drink is made from herbs, and is prepared for use as easily as tea. It is called

RUPTURE.

J. A. SHERMAN, HERNIA SPECIALIST, respectfully notifies the public, especially the many who have called at his New York office during his absence, that he has returned from his European office, London, England, where his successful treatment and the marvelous cures resulting from it received the approbation of the most eminent surgeons in Europe.

His fame soon spread, crowding his London office with the victims of Hernia anxious for relief. Patients who had endured long years of suffering came to consult him from India, Russia, Germany, Belgium, France and other countries. The remarkable cures made in London of chronic cases of patients, who had been at the various hospitals and under the care of the most eminent English surgeons without obtaining relief, consulted J. A. Sherman, and were at once relieved and eventually restored to a state of soundness through his method, to the astonishment of the eminent surgeons who had formerly treated them. In the case of Mr. Henry James, who had been a great sufferer for over twenty years, his wonderful and complete cure was certified to by that distinguished surgeon and operator in rupture at Kings College Hospital, John Wood, F.R.S., F.R.C.S., F.R.C., also Dr. Edward Bellamy, Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to Charing Cross Hospital, etc., Sir Henry Thompson, Surgeon at University College, London, and others.

J. A. Sherman's extensive practice in the treatment of Hernia in its various forms with a success unparalleled in all previous ages, is of the highest value to those who are afflicted with rupture and hope to be once more sound. In J. A. Sherman's treatment there is no operation or restriction from labor, while there is relief from the torment and injury of wearing trusses and security from that terrible condition known as strangulated rupture, to which every victim of Hernia is daily subject. His book of information and indisputable proofs is mailed to those who send 10 cents. His book of photographic likeness, showing the condition of patients before and after treatment and cure, is sent by express on receipt of 25 cents. Call on or address

The Slaughter-House.

Say, Paddy!
D'you mind the ould grog shop that stood on the corner down the Ninth avenue,
Kep' by Tim Hoggarty, back in the time whin the business—bad cess to it!—
Didn't make headway up in our parish, thanks to the Fathers
Fightin' an' prachin' an' prayin' and workin' an'
writin' ag'in' it?
Tim's was the place to get dhrunk like a baste for a dime, if you had one;
"Hell's ouldest whisky"—that was the name of it,
so mortial hot an' strong;
Dhrinkin' it giv' min the horrors so turrible hard they soon died of it.
Sure 'twas no wondher the widows that suffered—poor crathurs!—should christen it
"Hoggarty's slaughter-house."

Say, Paddy!
D'you mind poor Barney McSwilligan—fine, dacint man he was whin he was sober—
Wint there one night more than twinty years past now; but who could forget it?—
Lavin' his wife an' the childer cowld at home,
cryin' with hunger,
Spindin' his last cint at Hoggarty's dhrinkin' his skin full;
Thin fallin' dead on the doorstep with niver a priest to prepare him;
An' Hoggarty sindin' his dead corpse home to the wife on a hand-cart;
Sure, wasn't that a slaughter-house?

Say, Paddy!
D'you mind Mickey Bralligan's wife—Biddy
Doolan that was till she married—
Ravin' an' tearin' an' howlin' like mad forninst
Hoggarty's she'd been;
Scramin': "Come out, come out from the slaughter-house, Mickey, I tell you!
Don't dhrink the stuff that'll knock the life out o'
yer innocent body,
An' sind yer dear sowl unprepared down to hell in a jiffy foriver.
Mickey, come out, come out from the slaughter-house!"

Say, Paddy!
D'you mind the great sarmon we heard in the church the very next Sunday,
althar, after the gospel,
Givin' ag'in the grog-sellers one of their regular
"sand-blasts"?
Och! how the blood run cowld to the very tips of me fingers,
Lavin' me pale as a ghost all shiverin' and thrimblin' an' spacheless;
Whin of a suddint, out came his riverence thundi'rin' and shoutin'
The very same words we heard Mrs. Bralligan scraim at Tim Hoggarty's:
"Come out, come out from the slaughter-house!"

Say, Paddy!
D'you mind how you an' Mickey an' me went up
that same evenin',
Thin an' there tuk the pledge for the rest of our lives and foriver?
Blessed be God! from that day to this not one of us broke it.
An' what's more, we won't aither; eh Paddy?
Dhrink is a poor man's destruction.
Aye! an' the rich man's, too, as ye'll read ivery day in the papers.
Raison's agin' it, an' so is the faith, an' our wives an' our childer.
Many's the long, happy day, praises be to the Lord! that we've had since we stopped it;
With many more yet, by His blessin', to come, if we're thrue and desarve it.
Sure the whole parish, youngest and ouldest, all knows an' respects us!
'Twon't be your wife, nor Mickey's, nor mine,
that'll wondher what kep' us,
An' cryin' along with the childer, breakin' their hearts—the poor crathurs!
Thin, gittin' desp'rate, flying down the sthreet
bareheaded an' ragged,
Poundin' th' door of some devilish grog-shop, like to ould Hoggarty's,
Shoutin' and scramin'—disgracin' our name an'
our faith an' our nation—
"Come out, come out from the slaughter-house!"
—Catholic World.

For the Good of Others

Rev. Mr. Williams Heartily Endorses Hood's Sarsaparilla.

We are pleased to present this from Rev. A. A. Williams, of the Sillsbee street Christian Church, Lynn, Mass.:

"I see no reason why a clergyman, more than a layman, who knows whereof he speaks, should hesitate to approve an

Article of Merit

and worth, from which he or his family have been signally benefited, and whose commendation may serve to extend those benefits to others by increasing their confidence. My wife has for many years been a sufferer from severe

Nervous Headache

for which she found little help. She has tried many things that promised well but performed little. Last fall a friend gave her a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It seems surprising what simply one bottle could and did do for her. The attacks of headache decreased in number and were less violent in their intensity, while her general health has been improved. Her appetite has also been better. From our experience with

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I have no hesitation in endorsing its merits."

REPUTATION IS A GREAT THING in the commercial world. The reputation of being able to do something or make something better than any body else is a sure sign of future success, however slow it may be in coming. We suppose other firms could make as good as the Chilton Paints, if they would take the same trouble and go to as great expense. But seemingly they do not think it worth while. Other firms turn out as much, and more paint in a year than we do, but they don't turn out as good. We concentrate our energies first on the quality, the output is sure to increase later. We make a pure linseed oil paint. We guarantee it to be more durable and to cover more surface than any other paint made. Its excess of cost over others is far less than its excess of quality. Look for yourself at some of the buildings covered with Chilton Paints. Ask the owners about it. Invest fifteen cents in a pound can and see for yourself. Sold by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer.

A SUNNY NATURE.

Lovely Woman's Best and Greatest Charm.

What a Bright and Attractive Woman Has to Say to Her Sisters.

How a Happy and Joyous Nature Can be Acquired.

Women make the sunshine of life.

Did you ever watch the flowers turn with irresistible persistence toward the sunlight? So does the bright, joyous, sunny nature of a woman irresistibly attract all to her light-hearted, merry and buoyant spirits.

Such a nature makes glad the heart; it makes happy the time.

For a man, all the anxiety of business, the weight of care, the gloom and depression of spirits are dispersed as clouds by the sun before the bright smile of a joyous, happy wife.

And it follows no less surely that a cross woman, one never pleased, always fault-finding, discontented and unhappy, will repel all who approach her, and make those who should love her shrink from her society.

Now, the first requisite of good nature is good health. No one out of health can have bounding spirits and feel particularly good-natured.

If a woman feels nervous, weak, tired, languid, lifeless and miserable, experiences a faintness, sense of fullness after eating, has irregular appetite, constipated bowels, frequent headaches, wakeful or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, weak back, backache, dragging down pains, irregularities, female weakness, any or all of these, it is impossible for her to be light-hearted and happy.

And in the spring these feelings are very prevalent because of the torpid condition of the system after the winter. She must be cured first, and with returning health her old-time spirits will come back

If women will follow closely the advice and example of our bright and attractive correspondent, Mrs. Elmer Craig of LeRoy, Ill., they can easily attain both health and good spirits.

MRS. ELMER CRAIG.

"I was stricken with nervous disease," writes Mrs. Craig, "which affected my heart, head and stomach. I doctored with physicians of our town, but got no relief from the terrible sick headaches, pains in the heart and stomach until I used Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. Before I used this wonderful medicine the nerves in my eyes were so affected that I feared I would lose my sight. I would get so nervous and weak I could not walk across the room without terrible palpitation of the heart. I had not taken one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy before my head and eyes were cleared of their dull aching, and I am growing stronger every day. I cannot do half justice in the praise of this medicine."

This wonderful remedy is the greatest boon to women ever discovered, and by its use you can be restored to sound, vigorous and healthy womanhood. By all means use it now, in the spring, for everybody needs a spring medicine at this season of the year. This is the best of all spring medicines and is recommended as such by the doctors, to invigorate the blood, strengthen the nerves and start up the natural action of all the organs. You can procure it at the druggists' for $1, and it is purely vegetable and harmless. Indeed, it is the prescription of the great specialist in chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., who gives consultation free, personally or by letter. Use it and it will bring back strength to your nerves, freshness to your complexion, brightness to your eyes, the bloom of health to your cheeks, elasticity and spring to your step, and that happiness and enjoyment of life which you have missed so long.

The Three Ships.

O love, the sea was a glory,
In purple, and gold, and gray,
And the surf on the rocks was a story
With the pages turned in spray;
And the twilight was softly tender,
Roofed o'er with a burnished sky,
Awaiting the starry splendor
That should gild it by and by.

O love, on the violet border
Of the tossing, tumbled sea,
Three ships in a spectral order
Were voyaging silently.
And I, as I sat and wondered
What the fate of each might be,
Gave, while the sign I pondered,
A name to each of the three.

O love, not a star-candle hinted
That the ocean had gone to rest;
And faintly each sail was tinted
With the dull, rich rose of the west.
Wealth, Glory, and Love,—so I named them,
In order as slow they sailed;
But Wealth, even then, as I claimed them,
On my longing vision paled.

And Glory, voyaging seaward,
Through weavings of ridgy foam,
Still guided her course to leeward,
And yearned for her foreign home.
But one came onward to nestle
And rest in our harbored shore,—
See yonder, poor wave-tossed vessel!
Tell her, love, she need sail no more!
—Florence May Alt, in Peterson's Magazine.

A SHARK IN THE SURF.

A wild sea was running high in the open harbor of Madras. The sea always runs high there, and the last two miles must be made in surf-boats. The morning when the steamship Tigress dropped anchor and ran up her signal for the boats, great angry waves were bowling along before a fresh monsoon, and even the surf-boats found it hard to keep dry.

Among our passengers from Ceylon for Madras we had a dapper young fellow, who was as good a judge of pearls as I ever saw. He had been to Ceylon buying for an English house, and was now on his way to the Persian gulf to complete his stock. He was to leave us at Madras to go overland to Bombay.

He knew how to buy pearls, but he did not know how to take care of them. Before he had been on board a day he had told me all about his luck in Ceylon and had shown me his entire assortment. One of the pearls was simply gorgeous. Had it not been for a faint dot of blue upon one side it would have been worth a small fortune. He was delighted with my appreciation and enjoyment of the stones, and he showed me his treasures several times during the short voyage. Twice he left me alone with them. It was not, however, through any particular confidence in me, for I suspect he made quite as free with his treasures among several of the passengers. One was a Parsee, who was forever going between Ceylon and Madras, for what purpose I could never discover, though I had met him several times.

Whatever else he was I was sure that the Parsee was a great rascal, and was surprised and sorry for the young pearl man to find him making a most intimate friend of the fellow.

Together they stepped down the ladder to enter a surf-boat as we neared Madras. The young man went down first with his case of precious pearls in his hand. The Parsee was stepping into the boat when he paused and spoke to its black captain.

"I have forgotten something," he said, turning to the young man. "I must come by another boat; I will meet you at the hotel."

He gave the surf-boat a push with his foot and began to climb the ladder.

A sailor who was standing by me muttered:

"There's a shark in the surf yonder."

But instead of looking away over the water he looked directly down upon the Parsee and then at the young pearl man.

Of course there was a shark in the surf, but to me the sailor's sentence meant something more than that.

The Parsee simply walked behind the saloon house, stood there two or three minutes, then left the steamer by another boat.

My curiosity was thoroughly aroused. Glass in hand I watched the two boats, a quarter of a mile apart, still wondering what the sailor meant by "a shark in the surf."

Presently one of the great waves lifted the first surf-boat, but instead of taking the usual advantage of it to dip their oars and pull I distinctly noticed the boatmen sitting like statues. The almost naked fellow standing in the stern, with a long oar to guide the craft, suddenly leaned upon the oar, and the boat turned, was caught broadside on the wave and the next instant was capsized. I saw the passenger, with the pearl case still in hand, plunge head first into the water.

Like so many eels the black boatmen wriggled about in the water till they righted their boat, then clambered over the side and began to bail it out.

Not one of them seemed to give a thought to their passenger.

The next moment a piercing shriek sounded even as far as our steamer, and to my horror I saw the young fellow's body lifted out of the water not ten feet from the surf-boat. It made one whirl in the air, disclosed the head of a shark holding it across the back, then sank again.

As the next boat passed the place I saw the Parsee throw something overboard that left a white spot on the water, which remained as long as I watched it, convincing me that it was a buoy of some sort set for some purpose.

A few days later we were anchored in the Hoogly river, off Calcutta.

I was walking down the principal English thoroughfare when I saw the Parsee emerge from the door of a lapidary. He evidently recognized me, but he turned quickly in the opposite direction and walked away.

"A shark in the surf," I muttered, and with only a vague idea half formed in my mind I entered the shop and inquired of the dealer if he had an assortment of pearls on hand.

"How fortunate!" he exclaimed. "I was never so low as this morning. Pearls are in very great demand. But I have just purchased a large lot of the finest pearls I ever saw. I purchased them very low for cash, and I cannot only give you the first choice of this magnificent collection, but a great bargain besides. They are beauties! Yes!"

"Yes," I replied, "they are beauties—especially this one with a dot of blue upon one side. Too bad that it has the flaw."

I knew then why the Parsee went down to the surf-boat and spoke to the captain, but went ashore by another boat. I knew why he left the white buoy in the water. I knew why he continually journeyed between Ceylon and Madras, and I knew what the sailor meant when he watched him and muttered, "There's a shark in the surf."—Atlanta Constitution.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER.

Old Gentleman—"Sir! What do you mean, sir, by embracing my daughter?"

Young Gentleman—"I only had her head on my shoulder. I saw her on the street today with a trailing dress on."

"Well, sir!"

"A trailing dress gathers up all the germs of disease which may happen to be on the pavement."

"What of that, sir?"

"She has another dress on now, and I presume that she removed the other in the usual way by raising it over her head?"

"What has that to do with the matter, sir?"

"My coat has been laid away in camphor all summer, and I was merely disinfecting her hair."—New York Weekly.

"I should like to know," said Eve one day, "whether you consider yourself of more importance than I am." "Well, my dear," replied Adam mildly, "I don't know as I would put it just that way, but you must admit that you are a side-issue."—Washington Star.

AN INTERESTING PUZZLE.

Take your pencil and paper and ask the person you wish to puzzle to mention any number in three figures between 100 and 999.

Write the amount he mentions at the top of your paper. Remark carelessly that you always put down the answer to a sum before putting down the figures. Let us suppose that the number given you is 346. The answer to the sum is found by subtracting 2 from the unit column and putting this 2 on the left hand side, thus:—

346 Amount given.
Space left for figures.

2344 Answer to sum.

The answer is always computed in this way, from the first amount mentioned.

Now ask for a second sum of three figures. Put them under the 346, and then very quickly and silently write down three figures under these last ones, in such proportions that you make his last three and your three add 999 together. For instance, if the number given to you is 758, you must put down 241. Now ask a third amount to be mentioned; suppose this is 159, then you must again add three figures to make 999, viz., 840. Now hand the paper to any one to add up the amounts, which will be found correct. You see you will have five amounts in all to be added together. If rightly done this will always cause much surprise, as the answer has been already written.

EXAMPLE.

758.....(1) Sum given by any one to you.
242.....(3) Sum given to you to put down.
157.....(4) Sum added by you to make 999.
631.....(5) Sum given to you to put down.
368.....(6) Sum added by you to make 999.

2756.....(2) Answer written next, by taking 2 from unit column of first sum given and putting it on left hand side.

OF COURSE HE COULD.—A little girl was sent into a neighbor's house, the other evening, to borrow a copy of the newspaper. She departed with the treasure, but returned a few moments later with the request that the man of the house loan her mother his spectacles. "Well, by George!" ejaculated the astonished citizen; "isn't that a little too much?" "No, indeed," answered the girl. "Mother says you won't need your glasses so long as she has your newspaper; you can spare them just as well as not." He spared them.

YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest, — it is well expended, — you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

When you have a suit of clothes made in proper style, and in the proper way, it is money invested,—as it should be. That is the way we make clothes — in proper style, and in the proper way.

The New Year Minuet.

It was danced in the hall by the fire's red glow,
For the palms hid the lamps at the side,
And each form was outlined in the floor below,
While the shadows were spread far and wide.
But the shadows were misty—a softened gray—
In accord with the slow melody,
The light of the fire drove the dark lines away,
While it lent all a sweet mystery.

Both dancers were courtly and figures of grace,
Yet the maid held my fancy alone;
The glow gave a blush to her beautiful face;
In her dark eyes a fairer light shone.
And then as she courtesied, so stately, so slow,
With the grace of an age that is past,
It seemed like a dream of the long, long ago—
Like a dream that I knew could not last.

So stately, so slow, was each step that she made,
And so graceful the head that she bent;
The old-fashioned fan, that at times cast a shade,
Such an air of true elegance lent.
The place of the dance gave a place to my thought,
And I dreamed of the days that are dead;
The spell of the dance was by sorcery wrought,
And the hurrying modern days fled.

It was peace, the sweet rest of the olden day
When all idols were not overthrown—
When romance still lived, and, as king, love held sway,
Before Mammon to rule had grown.
And all those who watched were bewitched by the dance,
And they dreamed till the measure was o'er—
To-day was forgot in the short, backward glance
And the charms of the day gone before.
—Flavel Scott Mines, in Ladies' Home Journal.

HIS MOTHER-IN-LAW.

"Oh Wilford, you won't regard ma with aversion? You won't say things about mothers-in-law, will you?" little Mrs. Pendexter coaxed. "Because she isn't in the least like the kind of mother-in-law they mean, you know."

"I hope not," said Mr. Pendexter. "I sincerely hope not, Camilla."

"You never called me by my whole name before," sighed Mrs. Pendexter. "You always said 'My dear Cammy.'"

"Very well, my dear Cammy," said Wilford. "I shall certainly behave to your mother as I would to any other lady. If she is what she should be, all right. But I always have resolved to be master in my own house, and I always will be."

"My dear ma is a perfect lamb," sobbed Camilla. "I have her photograph upstairs. I'll get it to show you."

"I've seen it," said Mr. Pendexter, with the remembrance of a grim and ancient matron in spectacles, with a ruffled cap on her head and a prayer-book in her hand, floating before his eyes. "She looks like a very excellent person, but"—

"I did not know that you had ever seen ma's portrait," said Camilla. "But what, Henny Penny?"

Henny Penny was a pet name for her spouse.

"But the proof of the pudding is the eating, Cammy, dear," her spouse replied. Whereupon he put on his overcoat and betook himself to his usual affairs.

It was a singular thing never to have seen one's mother-in law. Mr. Pendexter began to feel that it was rather risky. He had met Miss Spruce at the house of a mutual friend. She was teaching a school at the time. Her only living parent, her mother, lived in California. He had rather rejoiced in the fact; and now she had broken up housekeeping and was coming to New York to live, with them no doubt, if she was invited to do so.

"If she is as serious as she looks, she'll expect me to teach Bible class," soliloquized Mr. Pendexter as he walked down the street. "She'll try to stop my cigars and my glass of beer of an evening. She'll consider my friends wicked young men, and throw the euchre deck into the fire. I know those goody-goody old ladies by heart.""

Suddenly as he turned the corner, a face met his eye that brought memories of long-departed days, of a flirtation which might have resulted in an affair of the heart. Mr. Pendexter was not as young as his wife. He had had his little experiences.

What a portly woman that was—could it be the same person?

He slightly lifted his hat; the lady smiled, he bowed.

"After all the world is a small place," said he to himself, and walked toward her.

"Well, I declare I never expected to see you again," said the lady with a laugh.

"And I thought you still in San Francisco," said Mr. Pendexter. "What nice talks we used to have, Mrs. Miller."

"Why, it's ten years ago, isn't it?" cried Mrs. Miller.

"Couldn't believe it. You look as young as ever," said Mr. Pendexter.

"Oh, when it comes to being told that one looks as young as ever all hope is over," said Mrs. Miller.

"Well, I intended a compliment," said Mr. Pendexter. "I'm getting bald," and he took off his hat.

"It only makes you look more like Shakespeare," said Mrs. Miller.

"She always says such nice things," said Mr. Pendexter to himself.

The idea that he looked like Shakespeare had occurred to him before, but no one else had ever told him that he did. He felt flattered. A little pang of regret pinched his heart. He had often felt that he had made a great mistake in losing sight of Mrs. Miller, to whom he had never been regularly introduced. They had begun to speak in the street cars during a blockade which provoked them both. They had always spoken after that. He judged that she was about his own age, and knew she was a widow. There was a charm about her that he had never seen in any other woman.

"And I think she told me she was alone in the world," he said to himself. "And I should not have been expecting my mother-in-law to make my life wretched—" His thoughts were running away with him; he laughed.

"Are you living in New York, Mrs. Miller?"

"Oh, yes," she answered; "I'm going to some friends after a while, but I am at —— hotel just now. I don't believe in popping in on people tornado-fashion. If they want me let them urge me, say I."

"I wish my mother-in-law had that disposition," said Pendexter to himself. Aloud he said: "I must call on you."

The lady laughed.

"I haven't asked you," said she.

"But you'll let me in if I do come?" said he. "It's my duty to call on a stranger."

All she said was: "Well, good-bye."

During the day Pendexter was not quite himself. He had discovered that his Camilla could pout. He feared the unpleasant things that he had been told came to a man with a mother-in-law. No doubt he should find her, grim and sarcastic, in the parlor on his return. He did not like that photograph. No, he did not like it. He thought he preferred being a little late that night. And as he went uptown the bright entrance of the little hotel met his eye, and he stepped off on the corner.

Mrs. Miller was in, so the waiter told him; and she tripped into the parlor in a dress of mauve silk that became her mightily. Her hair was black, her eyes were brown. She was no longer young, but she was by no means old. She was in very high spirits, and they flirted—yes, flirted—despite the fact that Pendexter was a married man—as they had ten years ago in California. They had supper together in the restaurant, and after supper an idea occurred to Pendexter.

"You want to see the new comic opera, Mrs. Miller?" said he. "Don't say no. Get your wraps and come along. We're a couple of old Californians, and must not set up for ceremonies. You don't need a chaperon now, do you?"

"I should say not, decidedly," said Mrs. Miller. "And I'll accept your invitation."

Shan't be home until very late. Obliged to meet a man on business. Provoking detention. H. P.

"A man about to be mother-in-lawed is entitled to a little fun beforehand. They feed condemned men well before they hang them," said Pendexter to himself.

It was a very charming opera, no other than "Erminie." And after the opera there was a promenade concert on the roof of the Casino, a glass of lemonade for Mrs. Miller, a bottle of beer for himself. And they walked arm in arm back through the moonlit streets of beautiful, wide-awake New York. And he was very serious as he left her at the door of the hotel.

"It won't do to go there again," he said to himself. "But, Lord, what a fool I made of myself ten years ago!"

He went home sadly and slowly. His Camilla opened the door for him in her dressing gown, with a china candlestick in her hand, in which guttered an end of pink candle. She had been weeping and her nose was red. How girlish and immature she was, he thought.

"You are very, very late," she said.

"Didn't I say I would be?" he asked. He stalked upstairs. She did not follow. After some minutes he looked over the banister. Camilla sat upon the lower stair weeping, the wick of the candle flaring in a little pool of grease in the candlestick.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"You never kissed me when you came in," sobbed Camilla. "It's the—the—the first time you ever forgot to do it."

"Come up and be kissed," said Pendexter. Camilla slowly climbed the stairs. Caresses were exchanged.

"Her Henny Penny did not mean not to kiss his Cammy," thus Camilla.

"Cammy doesn't know what business bothers are," said Mr. Pendexter. "Henny Penny is tired and worried with them; his Cammy must not be cross."

"No, no; but Cammy wants to share all Henny Penny's troubles," said Mrs. Pendexter. "Tell her all about it."

Just then the street door-bell rang violently—not once, but sixteen times.

"Oh, dear, dear, I believe it's dear ma!" cried Camilla.

Pendexter glanced at the picture over the chimney-piece.

"Just like her," he muttered as he went down stairs to open the door. A telegraph-boy was just about to ring again. Pendexter snatched the envelope he offered and signed as bidden, then rushed upstairs to peruse the missive. His Cammy was rushing about the room wringing her hands.

"A telegram!" she cried. "Something has happened to ma!"

Mr. Pendexter assumed a serious aspect.

"Be calm, Cammy," he said. "If it is the will of Providence that something has happened to her you mustn't rebel and all that, you know. Be calm."

"I can't until I know what it is!"

Mr. Pendexter opened the envelope and read the message he had sent to his wife from the hotel.

"Bother!" he said. "Oh, it's nothing, Cammy; only a message I sent you when I knew I should be detained. That wretched boy should have brought it at 7 o'clock."

"Oh, Henny Penny," cried Cammy, "how relieved I am!" Then she suddenly threw herself into his arms. "Cammy did not know her Henny Penny had sent her a word," she said.

"Oh, that's why you were frightened?" said Henny Penny.

"Yes," sighed Cammy, "oh, so frightened! And that man you had to see gave you all the bother?"

"Yes, of course," said Pendexter; "yes, certainly."

"What was his naughty name?" asked Cammy?"

"His name?" queried the guilty Pendexter. "Oh, his name was—er—Miller."

"Cammy hates him for bothering her Henny Penny," said Mrs. Pendexter. Then she turned the gas out and slept the sleep of innocence.

Mr. Pendexter's conscience, however, kept him awake some little while. He tossed about uneasily and sighed several times. He was thinking of the charming Mrs. Miller. He slept late next day. When he awoke a sound as of tinkling teacups met his ears. The house was small and the dining-room was just below his sleeping-room. Camilla was taking breakfast. Some one was with her.

"Oh, my prophetic soul, my mother-in-law!" he gasped. Getting softly out of bed, he approached the register and listened.

"Do have another biscuit, ma," he heard Camilla say.

"No, really, dear," responded another female voice. "That husband of yours sleeps this morning."

"He was out quite late last night," said Cammy, "and awfully bothered."

"What about?" asked the mother-in-law.

"Oh, business," said Cammy. "Nothing but business could keep him from me. Some dreadful man named Miller bothered him—I don't know how. He wasn't like himself when he got home; oh, not a bit! And the telegram he sent came after that, and I was terrified."

"You are too nervous, my child," said the mother-in-law. "Oh, dear me, to think of your being married, and I've so much to tell you. Last night I had the greatest fun. You know I used to see a great many people when I had a share in that business in San Francisco, and there was one very nice man—bald, but not so bad-looking—that I flirted with dreadfully. Well, yesterday, as I was on my way up to the hotel—I walked because I was so tired of sitting—whom should I meet but that very man! Why, I hadn't seen him for ten years; and he was just delighted; he is really smitten, Cammy. You know I look fifteen years younger than I really am when I am dressed and touched up a bit, and actually he called on me at the hotel and took me to the opera—it was fun."

"Oh, ma!" cried Cammy.

"Oh, I knew the man to be respectable," said the elderly lady. "But I'd forgotten his name—couldn't think of it and can't yet. He dealt with the firm for a long while—I saw him twice a week, but what his name was—. Well, no matter. After I got home I laughed and laughed. When I do get into a gale I can't stop. We went home slowly, like a couple of lovers, and he really said the tenderest things—"

"Why, ma!" said Camilla again.

"If you should cut up such a dreadful caper I'd disown you," said Camilla's mother. "But what's the use of being six-and-forty if you can't enjoy yourself as you please? Besides, he'll never see me again, you know. Oh, I could have married twenty times, Camilla, but I never, I own it—I never came so near really liking any one since your poor stepfather, Mr. Miller, died as I did that man long ago in San Francisco. I suppose he is much younger than I, but I should have said 'yes' if he had asked me then."

"And now, ma?" cooed Camilla.

"Stuff and nonsense, child," replied her mother. "Now I'm looking forward to being a grandmother."

"Oh, go away, ma!" said Mrs. Pendexter, and both ladies giggled.

As for Pendexter, he dressed himself in trembling haste and stole softly down stairs. A portiere gave him a chance to remain unseen while he took a peep. He had not doubted before—his ears had given him plenty of evidence—but now his eyes gave him further proof. The California charmer—the lady for whose sake he had deserted his Camilla the evening before—was his mother-in-law.

For a few moments Mr. Pendexter had a mind to run away, but reflection assured him that Mrs. Miller had quite as much reason to feel embarrassed as he had; and, with this consoling reflection in his mind he drew back the portiere and entered the breakfast-room.

"My dear mother-in-law," he said, "I am delighted to see you."

"It was so lovely of you, Henny Penny," said Camilla afterward.—Mary Kyle Dallas, in New York Ledger.

NOBODY'S CHILD.

He was a poor little waif of the tender age of three years, or thereabouts, and was picked up with his form clad in rags and his face grimy with dirt. Just as the policeman was about to carry the child to some charitable institution where it might receive care, John Edwards turned the corner on his way home. "Whose child is that?" he asked.

"Nobody's," was the answer.

"Where are you going to take him?"

"To the poorhouse, or somewhere; fact is, I don't care much, so I get him off my hands."

John Edwards had a tender heart and could never witness, unmoved, suffering of any kind. "But he surely must have some kin," he said.

"Nary a kin has he; he is a street vagabond. If he ever had any kin they must have been ragpickers. But I must lodge him somewhere."

"Suppose I take him home with me," John Edwards said. The policeman gladly consented, and the child clung to the hand of his newly-found friend. "I couldn't help doing it," murmured John, "but I wonder what the mother will say. She wouldn't like one of her little ones on the street, friendless, and that is just what this child was. I had to befriend him."

It was dusk when John Edwards turned in at the gate of his homely cottage.

"Father is bringing somebody with him," cried John Edwards junior. And six eager little ones rushed out to greet father and the new guest.

"Don't trouble the child," father said; "I think he is hungry." Mother's face appeared at the door.

"Who is it, John?" she said.

"Somebody's child; it doesn't appear to whom he belongs; but it seems likely to be our lot to provide for him."

"John Edwards," she cries, "how dare you suggest such a thing with six hungry mouths of your own to provide for?"

"You wouldn't have the child starve, would you?"

"But there are institutions for such children."

"The fact is, mother, I've taken a fancy to this little one, and I want to make a man of him. Just cut him a slice from that loaf, and cut it thick, for I doubt if the little fellow has had anything all day."

When the child was washed and clothed decently, he was found to be a comely little fellow, with blue eyes, curly hair and full, open brow. Healthy food rounded out the form, and he soon became the merriest of them all.

"How that child can laugh and sing with nobody to care for him, is more than I can tell," said Mrs. Edwards.

"But, mother, we are caring for him," John Edwards answered.

They called him Edward, while the neighbors spoke of him as that Edwards boy. Twelve years passed into the great eternity. The form of John Edwards had been resting in the village graveyard for more than six months. His children had all found work, and with honest labor managed to keep the home for their mother. Edward, who deeply mourned the loss of his benefactor, took his belongings and left one evening shortly after the father's death. Neighbors said it was a good thing, but the widow, who had long since learned to love him, thought otherwise.

The years passed swiftly by, and Mrs. Edwards lived on in her humble home caring for the needs of her dear ones. One day came a letter to her, and when opened she found a draft for five hundred dollars. "Please accept this gift from John Edwards' child," was the only explanation given.

Twice a year was this gift repeated, until Edward's prosperity became the wonderment of the family. The boys talked and mused about it in the shops and upon the streets. Mrs. Edwards lived in a new world of delight, her only sorry being that John was not there to share the prosperity.

One evening as the family sat at the tea table the door silently opened and a handsome young stranger entered. "Cut me a slice from that loaf and cut it thick, please," he said. "Edward," the mother cried, and the next moment she was closely clasped in his arms.

Edward's history had not been an unusual one. He was ambitious and hardworking, and had risen from one position to another in the business house where he sought employment, until now he was the junior member of the firm.

"But for the almost unnatural kindness of the one whom I loved as a father, I might have been a pauper," he said. "He taught me self-respect."

Over the grave of John Edwards a handsome monument was erected, and carved in marble the words, "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord."—The Presbyterian.

HOW TO WATER FLOWERS.

All writers on floriculture agree in the importance of moisture, but not all agree as to how water shall be applied in the effort to secure a moist temperature, writes Eben E. Rexford in an article on "Greenhouse and Window Plants," in the March Ladies' Home Journal. "Sprinkle daily," one says. "Flirt water over them with a whisk broom," says another. I notice that I have made use of the term "shower." I presume that the other writers quoted from had the same effect in mind that I have; but the term "sprinkle" is a misleading one, and a whisk broom is not the proper instrument to use in distributing water over and among plants. You must have something more than a mere sprinkling to do much good, and with a brush broom a mere sprinkling is about all you ever get. You should aim to throw water up among the branches, so that the lower side of every leaf is wet; unless this is done you but half accomplish what you aim at, and this is all you can accomplish by the use of anything that does not throw a stream of water forcibly in any direction where you want it to go. Every person growing plants in the window ought to be the owner of a brass syringe made expressly for florists' use. With one of these implements it is the easiest thing in the world to get water just where it is needed, and the red spider is sure to be routed by the persistent use of it.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

AT PARTING.

If thou dost bid thy friend farewell,
But for one night though that farewell may be,
Press thou his palm with thine. How canst thou tell
How far from thee
Fate or caprice may lead his feet
Ere the to-morrow come? Men have been known
To lightly turn the corner of the street,
And days have grown
To months, and months to lagging years
Before they looked in loving eyes again;
Parting at best is underlaid with tears,
With tears and pain.
Therefore, lest sudden death should come between,
Or time, or distance, clasp with pressure true
The hand of him that goeth forth; unseen,
Fate goeth, too!
Yea, find then always time to say
Some earnest word between the idle talk,
Lest with thee, henceforth, night and day,
Regret should walk.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Last week I mentioned the application of electricity for the removal of superfluous hairs from the face, and dismissed the subject with "this treatment is expensive." I suppose four women in every five over thirty years old have more or less of these hairs, but the number having anything like a moustache or beard is so small that I could not even guess at the proportion. My remarks about plucking the hairs were of course intended for the many women, not for the few. I have inquired in the last ten years of a great many ladies upon the subject; the testimony is that those who begin to pluck as the hairs begin to grow, and who persevere, find that after a few years the hairs give up discouraged and cease coming. In cases where this treatment is unsuccessful, as it probably would be if there were a heavy growth of hair, electricity is recommended as a permanent cure. In the New England Medical Gazette Dr. F. W. Elliott of Boston has an interesting paper, "The Use of Electricity in the Removal of Hairs and Other Facial Blemishes," from which I quote:—

"Fifteen years ago a woman suffering from hypertrichosis, or the growth of superfluous hair upon the face, was doomed to a deformity for which neither medicine nor surgery held out any promise of cure. Powerful cosmetics heroically applied, and destructive caustic pastes afforded only temporary relief at the

PALMER NEWS.

Town Officers Nominated.

Contrary to the usual custom the caucuses for the nomination of town officers have been held several days ahead of the time limit. It has previously been the scheme of each party to wait and see what ticket the other would put up before deciding on a plan of action. The Democrats had engaged the hall for this evening, the last date on which the caucus could be held, but kindly volunteered to withdraw in favor of the Republicans, proposing to hold their caucus Wednesday evening. The Republicans, however, called their caucus for Tuesday evening, and then the Democrats concluded that they wanted theirs on Monday. It was the largest caucus ever held in the town. A special train was run from Palmer to Thorndike and then to the town house, carrying a full load from each place. And it is certain that it was the liveliest gathering of the kind ever held in the town. It was evident from the start that there was to be a circus, for one faction, the main strength of which came from this village, with some help from Thorndike, was determined to defeat the nomination of Mr. Twiss, while another faction was equally determined that he should head the ticket. The anti-Twiss men were headed by H. C. Strong and James W. McKelligett, and the Twiss men by T. W. Kenefick and T. J. Moran. The fun commenced with the calling of the meeting to order. A petition was then presented asking that the vote for chairman and selectmen be taken by ballot. The law provides that when such petition is presented before the caucus the vote must be so taken, but Mr. Mack, who called the caucus to order, declined to receive the petition on the ground that it was not presented in time, over which decision there was considerable argument. James W. McKelligett and E. W. Burns were nominated for the office of chairman, and on a yes and no vote the chair declared the former elected. The decision was doubted, and an attempt was made to decide the matter by dividing the house, but that proved an impossibility on account of the crowd. It was then moved to proceed to ballot, which was done after considerable verbal sparring, and the result showed a large majority for Burns, giving the Twiss men the victory. James P. Gallcher was then chosen secretary. A motion to ballot for three selectmen on one ticket was then made by the anti-Twiss men, but was voted down after considerable wrangling and indulgence in personalities, and one to ballot for one at a time was carried. The names of John F. Twiss of Three Rivers, John F. Hanifin of Bondsville, James A. Hawkes, G. E. Buck and George W. Lyman of Palmer were presented, and the balloting began. The result showed another victory for the Twiss men, who carried every point they attempted, the vote being about 140 for Twiss to about 70 for Hanifin. The anti-Twiss men had been threatening that if Hanifin was not placed on the ticket they would vote no license, and there was little objection to the motion that the secretary cast one ballot for him for the second man. Then there was a ballot for the third man, the contestants being G. W. Lyman and J. A. Hawkes of Palmer, the latter winning, 98 to 73. It was then 11.15, and the balance of the ticket was rushed through in just 15 minutes. It seemed to be the watchword of the meeting that "no Republican need apply," for an attempt was made to nominate some on the remainder of the ticket who have held office for years and done good work, but the cry "He's a Republican" went up on the mention of their names, and they were "not in it." The ticket as filled out is: Selectmen, J. F. Twiss of Three Rivers, J. F. Hanifin of Bondsville, J. A. Hawkes of Palmer; town clerk and treasurer, F. D. Barton of Palmer; board of health, the selectmen; assessors, H. T. Bishop of Thorndike, D. W. Mack and E. Goodes of Palmer; overseer of poor, M. J. Dillon of Palmer; school committee for one year, John F. Shea of Bondsville; for three years, J. F. Luman of Thorndike and Rev. Joseph Marchand of Three Rivers; tax collector, James P. Gallcher of Palmer; auditors, H. A. Northrop and C. K. Gamwell of Palmer; constables, James J. Griffin of Thorndike, Thomas Carmody of Bondsville, Thomas Conry, John B. Dawson and H. A. Northrop of Palmer; fence viewers, Samuel Brown of Palmer Center, Dennis Mahoney, Dennis Fenton.

The Republican caucus was held on Tuesday evening, a special train being run to the town house. Dr. William Holbrook was chosen chairman and S. H. Hellyar secretary. It was voted that a committee of fifteen be appointed to bring in a list of officers for the consideration of the caucus, and so well was the work done that the list was adopted as reported, as follows: Selectmen, C. E. Getchell of Bondsville, H. E. W. Clark of Thorndike, H. P. Holden of Palmer; board of health, Dr. William Holbrook of Palmer, Dr. W. H. Bliss of Three Rivers, Dr. H. A. Smith of Bondsville; town clerk and treasurer, James B. Shaw of Palmer; overseer of poor, William Merriam of Palmer; assessors, C. F. Smith of Forest Lake, O. W. Studley of Palmer, John O. Hamilton; school committee for one year, Dr. H. M. Auger of Bondsville; for three years, William Breckenridge of Palmer and A. B. C. Deming of Thorndike; tax collector, W. A. Weld; auditors, S. H. Hellyar of Palmer and C. H. Clark of Thorndike; constables, M. J. Dawson and W. H. Brainerd of Palmer, James J. Griffin of Thorndike, F. W. Lavene of Three Rivers, Thomas Carmody of Bondsville.

Another Swindler.

Palmer seems to have peculiar attractions for pretended agents who really make a living by their wits, probably because of the many trains from the place and the ease of getting out of town at almost any hour. The latest to work the town made his appearance the first of the week, and offered to give a dozen cabinet photographs and a large crayon portrait for $3, $1.50 to be paid in advance. He claimed to be employed by a New Haven house, and the sittings for the pictures were to be made at the home of the custom r in a day or two. At the house of Henry Loomis on Pleasant street he saw Mr. Loomis, who declined to have any dealings with him. He then went across the street to Mrs. Aspinwall, the mother of Mrs. Loomis, and in the course of his talk remarked that he had taken an order from Mrs. Loomis, and upon Mrs. Aspinwall saying that Mrs. Loomis was her daughter the fellow said that he was sorry he spoke, for he had been particularly requested to say nothing about it, and presumed Mrs. Loomis was intending to make her mother a present of the crayon portrait. He also tried to secure orders from Mrs. Albert Loomis, Mrs. F. N. Aiken and others, but as far as known without very great success.

J. Pinkoffsky, the head of the Palmer Tailoring Company, was before the court this morning charged with disposing of property by lottery and will have a hearing in the matter the 25th. The complaint was made by W. H. Pease of Lee, of the state district police. Pinkoffsky has been running clothing clubs, the members paying $1 a week each and each week one member of the club getting a suit, the first getting his for $1, the next his for $2, and so on up to the 35th week, when each of the remaining 75 members receives his suit, which has cost him $35. There are no lapses, as if a member has paid in several dollars and concludes to drop out he can get a single garment of the value of the amount he has paid in, and on this account it is claimed the business is perfectly legal, as each one gets full value for their money. The drawings are done by members of the club.

Rain fell all Wednesday night and yesterday, making the traveling about as bad as could be imagined, and in some places impossible. In many places the snow was two feet or more deep in the highway, and the rain made it so soft that a horse would go to the bottom with every step. The high school scholars from Thorndike were taken home by train, the driver of the team which usually carried them refusing to take his horses out. The Bondsville scholars went to Thorndike by train yesterday afternoon, and from there walked a good share of the way home. To-day none of the school teams have run, and the paymasters of the mills and others who came into the village this morning report that it was almost impossible for the horses to get through, often sinking up to their bellies in the slush. The delivery team of Clark & Hastings started for Thorndike, but the whole load of meat was tipped out near the J. K. Knox farm.

This morning's daily papers contain the following dispatch from Worcester:—

L. E. Moore of Palmer, president of the national bank in that town, and several local men, among them Col. Henry E. Smith and Councilman W. H. Burns, have taken preliminary steps to establish a new national bank in this city. It is understood the bank is to start with $200,000 capital and $200,000 surplus, stockholders subscribing for the new stock at the rate of $200 a share. The new corporation is to be called the Merchants National Bank. It is expected that Mr. Moore will be its president and manager.

Mr. Moore will not leave Palmer at present, as might be inferred from this item, for the movement is yet in its initial stage only, and it will necessarily take some time to complete the organization and fit up the banking rooms ready for business. It is 24 years since the city of Worcester has had a new bank, and with its large growth in that period there is ample room for a new institution, this fact being well attested by the largeness with which the business men of the city are taking hold of the project.

The following cases of local interest have been entered in the superior court at Springfield: Mrs. Mary Thompson of Palmer sues Adolph Girouard of Bondsville for $3000 damages, claiming that he set fire to her house and barn in the latter place; William E. Hancock of Palmer wants $10,000 from the Boston and Albany road for injuries received last summer while caring for an engine at the round-house of the Ware River road; Mary Moran of Thorndike sues the town of Palmer because of injuries received while traveling on a defective highway; Miss Belle F. Niles of Monson brings suit against Blanchard Clifford of the same place for breach of promise. These suits are brought for action of contract: Lambert E. Ferry of Holland against H. T. Huntington of Palmer, $300; William D. Hitchcock against E. J. Wood of Palmer, $2000; Bridget Slattery of Palmer against S. S. Taft, administrator in the estate of Julia Shea, late of Palmer, $600; Edward A. Jennings of Brimfield against James Healey of Palmer, $600.

A Letter from Dr. Cross.

The many friends of Dr. Cross will doubtless be pleased to read an account of his trip to the flowery state. It was not written for publication, but as it contains nothing of a private nature the recipient does not deem it a breach of trust in making it public:—

SAN MATEO, PUTNAM CO., Fla. }
Feb. 21, 1893. }

Mr. A.—

Dear Sir and Brother:—Having nothing to do but to rest and recuperate (of which I was sadly in need when I started from home) and eat oranges and Florida fruit, which abounds here, I will write you a brief account of my experience since leaving home. The trip really began at New York, where I took a sleeper for Jacksonville, Fla., at 9.35 p. m. Wednesday, the 8th, and did not leave it until we reached Jacksonville Friday at 2 p. m. There was a pleasant party and we became quite well acquainted during the trip, my sister and her husband being among the company, so the time passed very pleasantly. We arrived at Richmond at 8.30 and stopped 20 minutes for breakfast. During the intervening time we had passed, while asleep, through Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington. Of course we could see but very little of Richmond while passing through.

After breakfast we were off again, traversing the state of Virginia and North Carolina during the day to Wilmington, through a very forbidding looking country. From Wilmington our course led to Charleston and Savannah, which latter city we reached early Friday morning. Savannah, I suppose, is a very handsome city, but we did not see much of it during our stop of half an hour for breakfast. From Savannah we passed on south through Jessup, where there was a riot between colored and white men some two years since, thence on to Jacksonville, which is a typical Southern city of 30,000 inhabitants, with electric lights and horse railway, but is soon to have electric cars. There are splendid hotels, patronized mostly by Northern people during the winter months. The principal streets are paved with cypress wood set endwise in round blocks. The streets are not kept clean like our Northern cities, and everything is so slack when contrasted with the push and bustle of the North.

We stopped three days at Jacksonville to look around and get information about the best localities further south, as we were after rest and health. We had thought of going to Oakland when we left home unless we should hear of a more favorable place. After hearing it recommended so highly we finally decided to come to San Mateo (pronounced San-Ma-te-o). This place is 75 miles south of Jacksonville on the St. John river, and settled mostly by Massachusetts people who raise oranges for the northern market. It is considered a very healthful place. I board at Idlewild Hotel; the boarders here are mostly Massachusetts people, friendly and social, which makes it very pleasant for us. We are in the midst of orange groves, and can pick and eat freely without money and without price. Also tangerines and mangrnes—red glove oranges we call them here.

I am somewhat better than when I left home. What I most need is rest and change to recuperate my exhausted powers. The climate here is delightful. In the midst of summer weather I set in my room with window wide open without any coat on, without any fire, and am plenty warm, thermometer 85° with a fine breeze. Have not had my window shut day or night since I came here. Am pleasantly situated and like here very much; can do about as I have a mind to and have any diet I wish without extra charge. Have been favored since coming into the state by coming among our own people. I do not know just how long I shall remain south, but long enough to get my strength back. I was sorry to give up my business, but could see no other way unless I would give up altogether. I shall probably go around some to different parts of the state just before I leave here for home, and see what there is to be seen in Florida. The orange, magnolia, oleander, palmetto, water oak, live oak and sycamore trees grow in profusion, orange and peach trees are in bloom, also rose bushes, and the yellow jasamine grows wild and is now in full bloom, very fragrant; also violets. The alligator thrives here in the St. John river. They are an ugly beast; we have shad caught here in the river, but they are not as large as those in our Northern rivers. The ocean bass is a fine fish, sweet and nice. The poorest meat we get here is beef, not anything near as good as at home.

Some of the most noted places here in Florida are Crescent Lake, Daytona, Silver Springs, Ormond, Oakland, St. Augustine and Indian River, and Kissimmee. The first thing one needs to do when one comes to Florida especially at the hotel, is to learn what they are going to charge before one takes a room or meals, and get special rates, or one may have a smart bill to pay. These things we were posted on before we arrived by people who had been here before. Another thing, do not expect to arrive at any place on the cars or boats on time advertised, for you will nearly always be disappointed. Go by boat when you can, to save expense, as the railroads are exorbitant in their prices.

The performance will consist of the customary first part, followed by an Irish sketch in one scene, clog and jig dancing by Thomas H. Coffee, a piccolo solo by P. J. Sullivan, and concluding with a farce entitled "A Soldier and a Sailor, a Tinker and a Tailor."

The big pulley on the jack shaft in the engine room of the Boston Duck Company broke about three o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Fortunately no one was seriously hurt. The engineer was just coming in from outdoors and a piece of the pulley barely grazed his hand. If he had been a moment sooner he would have been killed. The pulley was about 7 or 8 feet in diameter with a sixteen inch face, carrying a double belt, and ran 150 revolutions a minute. The belt was torn in two as if it was so much paper. It will take a week or more to repair the damage; in the meanwhile the mill will run by the water wheel, with help from the other engine.

The meetings are to be especially for the French people, and will be conducted alternately by Rev. T. G. A. Cote of Lowell, Rev. J. Provost of Springfield and Rev. N. Cayer of Ware.

These are the evenings when one would have to search a long time for anyone opposed to having the village lighted by electricty. If such a measure should be introduced at the town meeting there is no doubt but everyone would favor it, as the time is approaching when a system of lights will be indispensable to the progressive condition of the place.

The following scholars have been perfect in attendance for the term ending March 3d: Second primary—Vina Freak, Laura Lafortune; first primary—Lena Lavene, John Connor, Henry Harrison; third primary—Edward Kearns, Daisy Kearns, Lillie Ives; second intermediate—Nelson H. Many here remember Mr. Murai with pleasure, as he preached one Sabbath last year. He graduated from Andover Seminary last June, and is soon to return home. A contribution will be taken to help pay his expenses on his homeward journey.

The St. Mary's Temperance Society, at the meeting Sunday chose the following officers: Spiritual director, Rev. F. J. Lynch; president, Maurice J. Roche; vice president, Patrick Fleming; recording secretary, I. J. Gay; financial secretary, M. I. Longtine; board of directors, William Moran, P. J. Cahill, Thomas Longtine, James McKelligett, J. R. Donovan; entertainment committee, I. J. Gay, Patrick McKelligett, Thomas Longtine, Charles L. McCarty, Jr., J. R. Donovan.

On Tuesday evening about half-past seven some thirty of the friends of A. J. Parker took him by surprise as they walked in to congratulate him on the completion of his fifty-third year. A token of the esteem in which he is held for his earnest work in the Sunday school of the Congregational church as its superintendent was expressed by a gift of money. After various games and a general good time all bid him good night, with the hope that he would live to complete many more years of efficient service in the community.

The newly organized drum corps made its first appearance rather unexpectedly on Saturday evening, parading around the square, and was not a little disappointed at not finding the Democratic flag in its place. The boys played several national airs in front of the Clinton House, and were liberally applauded. They expect the rest of their instruments here this week. The boys appreciate the support which has been given them, and notwithstanding the failure of other organizations in the past, will endeavor to hold together. Mr. Chapman, the teacher, deserves much praise for his work.

A Thorndike Democrat writes that "There seems to be some dissatisfaction among the Democrats of this place over the result of the caucus Monday, and it now looks like a sure victory for the ticket which the Republicans nominated Tuesday evening. There is dissatisfaction among the Twiss and Hanifin men, and if what is heard from both sides be true there will be a wide split and some deep knifing will surely result, which may lay both of the Democrats off this year, which might be one of the best things that could happen, as it would be the means of having them unite on candidates hereafter, and not have those faction fights. When there are a dozen men seeking one office the only way to do is to lay them all off until they are united. There is much talk also of the town probably going for no license."

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 8, 1893.

The investigation of the entire prison system of the state, which will be undertaken by a committee of five of the Senate, is due to the recent agitation over the lack of responsibility which now prevails in the entire prison administration. The poor discipline at the state prison under the management of the late warden, Col. Henry B. Lovering, is doubtless the exciting cause which prompts the inquiry, but the evil is far deeper than this one case. The committee is instructed to report to this Legislature, and if the work is thoroughly done it will certainly increase the length of the session. But if it does, the time ought to be well spent, for the state is losing much money by the present system, and the discipline of the state prison is very bad.

It will not escape the notice of shrewd financiers and of honest men that the state declares that the new armory loan shall be paid, principal and interest, in gold coin or its equivalent. This is one consequence of the silver legislation, and a similar act was passed in the hard times of 1878, and was of much credit to the state.

A phase of the taxation question which has appeared at the state house in former years has turned up again this year, and with strong individual backing. It is the effort to exempt from taxation in this state the foreign stocks which are fully taxed in other states. It has always been the theory of this state to double the taxes on this kind of property, with the idea that it will discourage investments out of the state but tend to keep money at home. There is also the idea that the people in this state who get the benefit of our laws should help pay for them, no matter if their property is fully taxed in another state. N. P. Hallowell, Charles F. Adams and George Atkins are among the petitioners for a change in the law.

In response to the petition of the Congregational Association of Massachusetts and others, the liquor law committee has reported a resolve allowing $5000 for an investigation by the state labor bureau into the relation of liquor drinking to crime, pauperism and insanity.

Friday an eight-hour bill for state, county, city and town employes was reported by the labor committee. Senators Given and Burnham and Representatives Smith and Fuller dissent.

It is always interesting to look ahead and see how large the city or town one lives in is to become. Charles Carleton Coffin, in his plan for relieving the congested district of Boston, has presented some very interesting figures of the growth of Boston and its suburbs within the next few years. They are based on the figures of growth since 1850 and were originally made by City Engineer Jackson of Boston, in estimating Boston's need for a water supply. In the district within six miles of Boston's city hall, it is estimated that in 1920 Boston will have 826,320 people; Somerville, 130,090; Chelsea, 56,500; Everett, 57,640; Cambridge, 154,920; Brookline, 44,480; Malden, 117,630; Medford, 33,100; Winthrop, 17,430; Revere, 34,290; or a total of 1,470,280. This may seem some time ahead, but it is no further ahead than 1866 is back, and for a large part of the adult people that cannot seem so very far.

But when the radius of the circle is stretched from 6 to 10 miles, then the population is much more increased. Newton is figured to have 66,850 people: Hyde Park, 23,570; Quincy, 56,444; Melrose, 40,000; Arlington, 15,450; Watertown, 16,350; Belmont, 6260; Waltham, 63,140; Winchester, 10,250; Woburn, 26,130; Milton, 10,250; Stoneham, 14,220; Saugus, 9650; Lynn, 146,500; Nahant, 1560; Wakefield, 13,520, or a total population within the 10 miles of 2,199,420. By 1930 there will be nearly 2,700,000 people in the same space, or far more than our present total population. Boston will extend from Dedham to Swampscott, from Weymouth to Woburn and from Winthrop to Wellesley. The number of passengers to be transported by the electric, steam and other cars is estimated at 950,000,000 in 1920, based on the 51,000,000 of the steam cars and the 136,000,000 of the street cars in 1891, and the rate of increase from 1871. Of course these figures are inconceivable in their significance. They show that we are growing, right here in Massachusetts, larger than we can conceive, and when it comes to New York, Chicago and the great West, and then to the nation as a whole, what can we say?

There is before the Legislature a petition for the admission of a storage battery street car system to Boston, Cambridge and Watertown, with the right to use the West End Company's tracks. The backers of the system are the same men, in the main, who own the Milford storage battery system, which many regard as superior to the trolley.

Wednesday afternoon came the debate on the bill to repeal the law which limits liquor licenses to one for every 1000 people, except that Boston may have one for every 500. The liquor men apparrenty plucked up much courage because their side was led by Rev. John Brown of Fall River, the only minister in the House. The galleries were packed and chairs were even set in front of the speaker's desk. Mr. Brown made a speech setting out the horrors of illegal selling in kitchen dives, as the liquor was sold as freely as milk in his city. Mr. Mellen of Worcester helped him out, but Roe of Worcester, Wellman, John Quinn Jr. of Boston (representing the rummiest ward in the city) and others carried to many guns for the repealers, and the bill was lost by 80 to 131 and five pairs. Nearly all the Democrats voted for the bill.

Ex-President George G. Crocker of the state Senate petitions that under the license limitation and local option laws, licenses may be sold at public auction.

The liquor committee has reported with one dissenting member in each case, bills to regulate the transportation of liquors so that seizures may be made in no-license places; to prevent the issue of licenses to grocers, and to prevent retail sales except to guests who order food with their drink.

Norman D. Fenton died at his home on Main street Tuesday evening after an illness of ten days. Mr. Fenton has lived in Monson for 30 years, and for the last few years has had poor health. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon, Rev. W. H. Marble officiating, assisted by Rev. F. S. Hatch.

The supper and social at the Congregational church Wednesday evening was a decided success. The entertainment consisted of tableaux representing different advertisements, as Ivory Soap, Pears' Soap, Beecham's Pills, etc. The costumes were very tasty, and the entertainment decidedly unique.

This will furnish a grand opportunity for all who wish to hear the new organ, which is the gift of the late Mrs. C. W. Holmes and daughter, Miss Esther R. Holmes, to the Congregational church.

The circulation the past year was 9104, the daily average being about 30 volumes. The number of persons drawing books is 536. The following officers of Grace Chapel parish were elected at the meeting on Saturday evening last: Clerk, C. E. Fletcher; treasurer and collector, H. W. Cutler; parish committee, H. Cutler, Reuben Sikes and M. H. Cooley; committee on soliciting pledges, M. H. Cooley and Miss E. Evelyn Bell. An appropriation of $1000 was voted to help defray expenses for the ensuing year.

Burbank. The club will meet at the church in Glendale next Monday to discuss the growing and marketing of fruits and vegetables.

A very successful presentation of the sacred cantata "Nain" was given at Fisk Hall Saturday evening by the musical department of the Academy. Miss Burt sang with feeling and ability in the role of "Mary Magdalene," and James Davies, who took the part of Christ, was probably never heard to better advantage, his beautiful tenor voice being used most artistically in the tenor solos, and in the duets with Miss Gould. Mr. Davies is tenor soloist in St. Paul's church, Springfield. The male quartette also sang well, and the chorus performed their duty most effectively. Miss Colburne, who directed the cantata, is to be complimented on its success, and it is hoped that another musical treat of the same character may be given at no very distant date.

BELCHERTOWN.

The insurance on the burned Highland House has finally been paid.

The farm occupied by Morrison Blodgett has been sold to Dwight Shumway for $1225.

HAMPDEN.

Our post office has been made a postal note and money order office.

The Ladies' Society connected with the Methodist church will meet with Mrs. Clark Goodwill this evening.

Gold-bowed eyeglasses and chain when burned with Lehigh coal add no appreciable heat to the room, and it is quite an expensive experiment to try, as one lady here can testify.

Our town voted no license, but judging from appearances the rum-holes are doing a flourishing business, as many a sorrowing home can testify. What shall be said of the man who professes temperance and yet retains as tenants those engaged in this accursed traffic?

A missionary concert was held last Sunday evening at the Baptist church, to which the other societies were invited, and $24 were received for Home Missions. Mrs. Samuel Chapin has presented a beautiful rug for the same object, and the votes for the same will amount to several dollars more.

The Baptists, with a few specially invited friends, had a sleigh-ride to Wilbraham last Friday night. After leaving the village the traveling was so bad that they were obliged to walk their horses nearly all the way, but had a pleasant time after arriving at the Allis House. Several of the small hours had passed ere they got home, happily without a tip-over.

Strickland; assistant engineer, Charles Gilbert; clerk, George H. Crossman; treasurer, George B. Anslow; John Keating, Robert Armour, William A. Benson, John B. Newell Shepard and Marcus Burroughs have returned from their California trip.

Wilson Fairbanks spent last Sabbath at home, and returned to Saratoga Monday.

A. H. Dunber of Worcester gave a temperance address in the Methodist church last Sabbath evening.

Sayles & Jenks are to rebuild their mill, making the new structure nearly double the size of the old one.

There is to be concert and dance in the town hall on the evening of the 17th under the auspices of the Father Mathew Temperance Society.

The funeral of Mrs. Bethiah Chadwick, 89, widow of the late Joel Chadwick, was held from her late home Saturday. She was a member of the Congregational church and the oldest woman resident in town.

The trustees of the Iron Hall have been ordered to pay over to the receiver the amount in their reserve fund, which is about $800, and are not particularly pleased at the prospect. The money was loaned to N. D. Joyce on two notes of $400 each, and Mr. Joyce declines to pay them till they are due, one in August 1895 and the other a year latter.

The following company has been organized for the new steamer: Foreman, J. J. Lycett; assistant foreman, H. Hall; secretary and treasurer, Frank Stearns; engineer, A. A. Lavine; assistant engineer, Charles Horton; foreman, Robert H. Ramsdell; members, James Sheridan, Harry Bridges, John Shean, W. S. Sprague, E. Price, Jr., Robert Morse, Cyrille Langevin and Dennis Lorden.

LUDLOW CENTER.

A well-attended fellowship meeting of the Young People's Societies in this town and North Wilbraham was held with the Epworth League at the M. E. church Tuesday evening. The interest has been such in this first series of meetings that they propose to continue another round with the four societies which have joined in them.

Rev. M. P. Dickey read his resignation last Sunday, to take effect April 1. His congregation was much surprised. He is to accept a call from a Congregational church in New Hampshire. Mr. Dickey has been in Ludlow ten years, has proved himself an earnest Christian minister, and his people are loath to part with him. A parish meeting is called for next Tuesday at 1 p. m. to act on his resignation.

The caucus to select names to be voted on at the town meeting next Monday was held at the town house Thursday evening. Among the special articles in the warrant is one to see if the town will support a more advanced grade of school at this village than is now maintained. While the town is not obliged by law to support a high school, there is a strong feeling that an advanced English course at least should be provided. Not much work has been done to stir up the temperance sentiment. The town is probably safe for no license, but all the "no" voters should vote next Monday if they wish to keep up the sound record of last year.

The review of the ten years served by the pastor of the Congregational church last Sunday showed a membership of 136, a net gain of 13 during the pastorate; 78 have been received in the 10 years, 59 on confession and 19 by letter. The deaths have been 24, only two of whom have been men, most having been of aged women. The dismissions to other churches have been much larger than the accessions from such sources. The benevolent contributions have about doubled, and now average about $300 per annum. The parish meeting Monday elected the old board of parish officers. Mr. Dickey expects to remove the last of this or the first of next month.

Both the ministers of the Center churches will probably leave about the first of April, Rev. G. H. Durgin not expecting to return here next year. Both churches are in a prosperous condition, and are exceptionally harmonious within themselves and toward each other. Rev. Mr. Durgin's two years at the Methodist church have been attended with marked success. Mr. Durgin stepped from the shop to the pulpit less than five years ago. His first experience in preaching was in the Free Baptist church at Milton, N. H., where he was asked to supply for a Sabbath. He was liked so well that from one Sabbath it continued several months and though a Methodist the pastorate of the church was offered him, which he declined. He served an appointment in the Methodist church at Milton Mills, N. H., for nearly a year. Feeling the need of more education, though married he entered Wilbraham Academy in the fall of '90, which he has attended more or less ever since. He was appointed to the Methodist church here in April, 1891, and again last year. From the first the church felt the pulse of his vigorous management. Captain Hay's band of Christian Crusaders found prepared hearts, and the large revival of a year ago has continued its impulse till now. The present membership of the church is 134 in full connection and 21 on probation. There have been received in the two years 37 into full connection and 53 on probation. The benevolent contributions have risen from $36 to $170, and all the departments of church work are in equally improved conditions. Mr. Durgin is not certain yet where his field of labor will be next year. Several places are under consideration, and probably he will remain in this part of the state.

WARE.

The A. O. H. of Gilbertville will celebrate St. Patrick's Day by a concert and sociable next Friday evening.

W. H. Beaman, formerly of this town, now of Springfield, has been awarded $1634, to be awarded by the town of Ware on account of injuries received by being thrown from his carriage on the West Warren road July 4, 1891.

There will be three road commissioners to elect at the coming town meeting. W. C. Eaton and A. H. Cummings, whose terms do not expire, have both resigned. It is said that they are tired of hearing complaints of the bad state of the roads. If this is the case and competent men cannot be had to serve on this board, the sooner the town appropriates money enough to make the roads what they ought to be the better.

CARD.—The undersigned would hereby tender sincere and heartfelt thanks to the neighbors and friends for their many acts of kindness during the sickness and death of their husband and father, Norman D. Fenton.

Physicians Puzzled.

Many persons are unable to sleep on their left side. The cause has long been a puzzle to physicians. Metropolitan papers speak with great interest of Dr. Franklin Miles, the eminent Indiana specialist in nervous and heart diseases, who has proven that this habit arises from a diseased heart. He has examined and kept on record thousands of cases. His New Heart Cure, a wonderful remedy, is sold at LeGro & Lynde's. Thousands testify to its value as a cure for Heart Diseases. Mrs. Chas. Benoy, Loveland, Colo., says its effects on her were marvelous. Elegant Book on heart disease free.

Recovers His Speech.

Alphonce Hempbling, of Summit township, Butler Co. Pa., made an affidavit that his twelve-year-old son, who had had St. Vitus Dance for twelve years, lost his speech, was completely cured after using three bottles of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and also recovered his speech. Thousands testify to wonderful cures from using it for nervous diseases, dyspepsia, nervous debility, dullness, confusion of mind, headache, etc. Four doses of this Nervine cured Mrs. W. E. Burns, South Bend, Ind., who has been suffering with constant headache for three months. Trial bottle and elegant book at LeGro & Lynde's. (4)

Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills

Act on a new principle—regulating the liver, stomach and bowels through the nerves. A new discovery. Dr. Miles' Pills speedily cure biliousness, bad taste, torpid liver, piles, constipation. Unequaled for men, women, children. Smallest, mildest, surest! 50 doses 25 cents. Samples free at LeGro & Lynde's Drug Store. 52-17

Elderly people remember their spring bitters with a shudder. The present generation have much to be thankful for, not the least of their blessings being such a pleasant and thoroughly effective spring medicine as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is a health restorer and health maintainer.

The use of Hall's Hair Renewer promotes the growth of the hair and restores its natural color and beauty, frees the scalp of dandruff, tetter and all impurities.

For all derangements of the throat and lungs Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is the speediest and most reliable remedy. Even in the advanced stages of consumption this wonderful preparation affords great relief, checks coughing and induces sleep.

to travel? If so, you must be very careful of your health, or your doctor bills will cost you more than your traveling expenses. A bottle of Sulphur Bitters will protect you from all sickness incident to a change of climate.—Evening Telegram.

Took First Prize.

The State Board of Pharmacy recently analyzed twelve of the most popular medicines, in order to see whether they were what they were recommended to be. After two weeks of careful work they awarded the first prize, a gold medal, to Messrs. A. P. Ordway & Co., proprietors of Sulphur Bitters, it being in their opinion the best and only strictly pure blood-purifying medicine in the market.—Weekly Chemist.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March, 1893.

On the Calendar
Exhibition of magnificent antique oriental rugs and carpets March 16, 17 and 18; sales by public auction March 20, 21 and 22.
Opening of spring millinery, spring jackets and wraps, Wednesday and Thursday, March 15 and 16.

The exhibit of oriental rugs and carpets will include pieces that cannot be duplicated at any cost; rugs that are magnificent specimens of a lost art and race; rugs that, if they could speak, could tell a tale of Oriental splendor and magnificence that would seem to us like a tale from the Arabian Nights.

Description catalogues will be ready the last of this week. A copy will be sent free to all who ask for it.

The interest in the millinery opening is expected to surpass that of any opening heretofore. We shall show a larger variety than ever before, not only of finished hats and bonnets, but of materials to make them of.

Not less important is the opening of spring wraps and jackets. The exhibit will be large and rich; for Fashion has spread herself this season.

Have you gathered from what we have said that our collection of dress fabrics is wonderful for variety and beauty? It is truly so.

We doubt very much if there's any such stock of fine dress goods any where outside of a few metropolitan stores. We judge from the exclamation of visitors, merchants, traveling salesmen and others who go about.

The assortment is, perhaps, as large as those of any half dozen houses in this region taken together. We speak advisedly.

See the variety at 50 cents a yard: Sixty colors and shades of cashmere; forty colors and shades of India serge; nine lines of mixtures, eight or ten colors to each line; in all about two hundred different effects.

Samples sent.

Left aisle.

Fine velours, amures, diagonals and granite cloths, with little figures in relief, belong to the most luxurious of black dress goods; and are acceptable to ladies of quiet tastes—ladies who wear only black, and who like to diversify the somber color with something more than mere richness of material. 75 cents to $1.50 a yard.

Samples sent.

Left aisle.

A dress fabric much sought after and rare is changeable poplin at $1.25.

You have seen the damp sea sand just above the surf, streaked with parallel lines of light and shade. You might lay a piece of this cloth down on the sand and hardly tell which is cloth and which is sand.

LATER.

Saved from the fire.

Early on the morning of February 14th the Glasgow Gingham Mills of South Hadley Falls had a fire, causing a loss of about $15,000.

We have bought the stock saved from the flames, nearly two hundred thousand yards of ginghams and suitings; and at this writing (Monday) have a carload at the station, and one or two more coming.

You shall have them as soon as we get them ready—probably Thursday of this week.

The sale will take place in the basement. The intention now is to sell for almost nothing, for the sake of advertisement.

Secretary Windom's

Last Words Should be Read by All who Value Good Health and Happiness.

Secretary Windom, in his last speech, delivered in New York city before the leading financial men of this country, said "that poison in the blood permeates arteries, veins, nerves, brain and head, and speedily brings paralysis and death." He but issued a warning that should be heeded by every person, old and young. It is impossible for the human body to grow strong and vigorous with deadly poison lurking there.

Science has given us a corrective in the form of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which will cleanse the blood of all impurities and restore the weak and debilitated system to health and vigor.

Mrs. Annie Barton, Catskill, N. Y., says, "It is the best medicine I have ever known for purifying the blood, for it cured my husband of running ulcers of the leg when skilled physicians failed to do him any good."

From the common face pimple to that most dreaded of all skin diseases, scrofula, it is the master of, and will cure, the most stubborn cases. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is not a new decoction recently put on the market, but an old and tried medicine, and is the household remedy in nearly every home in the eastern states for the cure of kidney and liver complaint, salt rheum, erysipelas, rheumatism, and all the ills that are brought about by impure blood.

Mr. John R. Stephenson of Albany, N. Y., writes that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a wonderful medicine, and for sick or bilious headache or derangement of the stomach it has no equal on the face of the earth.

An Exhausting Ordeal.

He came from the office and threw himself prone
On the lounge like a man who was seven-eighths dead,
And with spasmodic effort, while moan followed moan,
"I'm weary, so awfully weary!"

"Ah, dear," said his wife, as with sympathy sweet
She stroked his brown hair with her soft finger tips,
"You've been trying Joe Donohue's hundred mile feat?"

"Worse than that!" came in gasps from the faltering lips.

"Can it be," she rejoined, with a tender caress,
"You've attempted to count up the number of those Who in France are concerned in that Panama mess?"

"Worse than that!" came the answer in moribund throes.

"Have you striven to interview Grover?" she said,
"Have you climbed to the top of a latter-day flat?
Have you into a fight with McAuliffe been led?"

"Worse than that!" he responded in turn, "Worse than that!"

"Then tell me, oh, tell me the cause!" she besought,
And he answered as one who was tortured with cramps,
And in breath with the acme of suffering fraught—
"I've been licking two dozen Columbian stamps!"

AMONG THE PARAGRAPHERS.

TACKLING A BIG JOB.

Now bring me a ladder and chair, my lad,
And a whitewash brush that's damp,

Both Had Eczema In Its Worst Form

After Physicians Failed, Hood's Sarsaparilla Perfectly Cured.

Great mental agony is endured by parents who see their children suffering from diseases caused by impure blood, and for which there seems no cure. This is turned to joy when Hood's Sarsaparilla is resorted to, for it expels the foul humors from the blood, and restores the diseased skin to fresh, healthy brightness. Read the following from grateful parents:

"To C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"We think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most valuable medicine on the market for blood and skin diseases. Our two children suffered terribly with the CHARITY COVERS A MULTITUDE OF sins—paint a multitude of imperfections. The better the paint the more effectually are the imperfections concealed and the greater the quantity of them hid from view. Given durability, the best test of paint is the quantity of surface that it will properly cover. Wherever the Chilton Paints have been tried, it has been found that they effectively cover from 30 to 40 per cent more space than a like quantity of any other paint. Moreover, being seven times ground in all shades there is an absolute uniformity of color and an absence of streaking particles. They are made with pure Linseed Oil and the best turpentine drier and give a beautiful finish. Get a pound can and see for yourself. Sold by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer.

SHE PROVES IT.

And the Proof is Just What Our Readers Want.

Of How It Began She Hasn't the Slightest Idea.

But Concerning Its Ending She is Explicit and Exact.

We never know just how a thing begins.

But we are always certain of the results which are left.

These reflections were called out by the fact that it is so easy to drift into anything. In this world we must keep our eyes about us or we shall constantly find ourselves drifting into trouble.

We call to mind an instance in which a most estimable lady unconsciously and without knowing when or how, allowed herself to drift into what became to her a most serious matter and caused many years of anxiety and suffering.

This lady is widely known—Mrs. Mary Jane Foster of 327 West 21st street, New York city, and what she says are true and exact facts, as can be easily and readily ascertained by any one. If experience is of any use, hers is certainly a revelation to be heeded by all.

Without knowing their meaning she had a dull feeling head, headaches, dizziness, bad taste in the mouth, especially mornings. Her sleep was broken and she would wake mornings feeling tired and exhausted. After a time the appetite became irregular, there was a fullness or bloated feeling after meals, rising of gas, sour stomach, biliousness and constipation,—such symptoms, in fact, as people frequently experience during the spring of the year.

MRS. MARY JANE FOSTER.

"Why," she said, "for years after I suffered from the worst form of dyspepsia, with gas and fermentation of food, and terrible spasms that seemed to start at the stomach and rise to the head.

"Even the lightest food caused great pain and distress after eating, and I also suffered with great exhaustion, dizziness of the head, and weakness of the limbs so that I could scarcely stand on my feet.

"But I am now completely cured by the use of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy, and I take pleasure in giving my experience to the public in order that other sufferers may be cured as I have been."

Look out for such troubles in the beginning. Now, in the spring, when everybody is certain to be more or less out of order and needs a spring medicine, take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy immediately, for it is the best and surest of all spring medicines. It will invigorate the blood, strengthen the nerves, and give you perfect digestion and regular action of liver, kidneys and bowels. All druggists keep it for $1, and it is purely vegetable and harmless.

It is the great remedy recommended by doctors for spring debility and diseases, because it is the discovery and prescription of the well-known physician, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple Place, Boston, Mass., the successful specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases. The doctor can be consulted without charge by any one, either at his office or by writing to him.

Don't ever take BLUE PILLS, or mercury, they are deadly. Put your trust in Sulphur Bitters, the purest and best medicine ever made. Is your TONGUE COATED with a yellow, sticky substance? ## TWO SIDES OF AN OPPORTUNITY.

"Yes, it is very pretty." Bertha Holmes looked with great satisfaction at the graceful draperies of a new dress she was trying on.

"I took a great deal of pains with it. I am glad you are pleased."

"Oh, I'm always pleased with your work Janet." Bertha never failed in pleasant acknowledgement to those who worked with her.

The two girls formed a striking contrast as they stood before a long mirror—Bertha gazing at her pretty self with a care-free delight in the becomingness of a new dress, the sewing girl taking in each detail of the fit, settling a fold here, patting down a ruffle there, with the anxious face belonging to one to whom life has turned its struggle side. After satisfying herself that all was right she said, with a little flush, which showed that she found the pressing of her rights a difficult matter, "Would it be convenient for you to let me have the money very soon, Miss Bertha?"

"O, I suppose so, Janet. Is there any great hurry?"

"I haven't been very well," was the hesitating answer. No one taking careful heed of the hollowness of the large dark eyes and the paleness of the cheeks would have needed to be told this. "And I have been trying to arrange to take a little holiday near the end of the month."

"I am sure you need it," said Bertha warmly. "Of course I will let you have the money very soon. Eight dollars? Yes, that is moderate, I'm sure. Good by. I'm glad you are thinking of an outing."

Bertha hurried away, fully determined to be prompt in the matter of the payment for the dress. But she was making preparation for her own summer outing and soon allowed the matter to escape her mind. The new dress, representing so many hours of pains-taking labor to the little dressmaker, was but one feature of the more fortunate girl's outfit.

Ten days later Janet contrived a pretext for calling at Bertha's home.

"I was coming this way and I thought I would just stop in with the pieces of your dress which I forgot when I brought it home."

"Yes, thank you," said Bertha. "And I intended to take that money to you before this, Janet, but I really forgot to speak to father. He's out of town for a day or two. Will it do the early part of next week?"

"O yes."

"Well, I'll remember it."

"You are not looking at all well," said Bertha's mother, gazing with sympathy at the small, pinched figure.

"I've been coughing a good deal lately," said Janet, "but the doctor thinks a little rest and change will set me up for winter's work."

Mother sighed as she took in the difference between her own blooming daughter and the girl to whom so little rest came, wishing with all her heart that she could make life smooth to every young girl.

"Be sure you don't delay about paying her, Bertha," she said, after Janet had gone.

True to her promises, Bertha, early in the following week, set out with the money for Janet in her pocket. On the way she was met by a friend who asked "Are you all ready for the tennis tournament?"

"The tournament? O, I had about given that up. My tennis dress looks shabby, and I am having so many new things I thought I'd have to get along with it."

"You can't give it up. I saw Harry Lucas yesterday and he said they had put you on the program for the ladies' doubles. Helen March had to go away with her sick mother, and you are in her place."

"I really don't see how I can," said Bertha in great perplexity. "My dress isn't fit to be seen in a tournament."

"Look here," pausing as the two passed a gaily decorated shop window. "There's a dress for you. Look at that blouse! Did you ever see anything more stylish than those stripes in pale blue and white? Only three dollars it's marked. And there's flannel for your skirt that exactly matches it. Just your color, Bertha."

"But I was not intending to get a new suit," said Bertha.

"But you say you need it, and I'm sure that's not high. You can make up the skirt yourself and the whole thing will cost you so little. If you haven't the money with you I can let you have it as well as not."

"Thank you, it isn't that," said Bertha undecidedly. Eight dollars were in her purse. The tennis dress was most tempting, but she thought uneasily of her dressmaker's bill.

"After all," she reasoned with herself, "there can be no great hurry about paying Janet. She was not to go away until the end of the month, and that isn't here yet."

The dress was bought, and in the interest of making it and the tournament the days passed without an obtrusive thought of the white face and the cough for which change was needed. The tournament took place in a neighboring town which was something of a summer resort. Bertha met many of her school friends, and being invited to visit from one to the other, spent two or three weeks away from home.

It was at a family worship on the first morning after her return that thought of Janet was first forced upon her mind. Her father was an impressive reader of the Bible, and a few sentences there came upon her with startling distinctness: "Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor. At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee."

Keenly it struck to her heart that she had in her utter thoughtlessness and selfish seeking after her own pleasure kept back "the hire of the poor and needy." The Lord with stern justice had marked such things in olden times. Why should he not now?

She procured the money and set out at once for Janet's home. Near the house she perceived a stir rather unusual in the cross street, the next moment becoming aware that it centered at the gate through which she had often gone to the young dressmaker. Bertha stopped suddenly in her quick walk, and leaned against the fence with a white face and sinking heart. A funeral was taking place at the shabby genteel house.

"Who is it?" Bertha contrived to whisper to one of the bystanders, motioning toward the narrow coffin which was being brought out.

"Some young sewing girl, I believe. I don't know her name. She has been ailing some time but went down all at once near the end."

Bertha stood, scarcely conscious of what she was doing, watching the small procession which followed the coffin. A tight hand seemed closing on her heart as she thought of the last day on which she had been here, so full of herself and her own pursuits, so absorbed in trifles, so utter oblivious of the needs and burdens of this other, a young girl like herself.

What would she give to-day for the opportunity which she had then slighted for the power of speaking a word of sympathy to those now dulled ears, a word which might bring a smile to those dumb lips! She had done nothing to smooth the path which had been so rough to the feet now settled in everlasting rest. She had helped cast a block before them, she had taken the part of the oppressor, had kept back the hire of the poor.

"I did not mean it, I did not." The cry arose in her heart. But what a poor plea it was! Would it avail in His eyes who had so blessed her with all which could make young life sweet and joyous? Could there be any excuse for her that she had closed her eyes to the need of her less happy sister?

As the last of the loiterers departed she was about to follow when her attention was drawn by a slight noise at the front of the house. Somebody was opening the blinds and—Bertha gave a little cry—it was Janet's face which appeared behind them.

It was paler than before and in the moment in which Bertha took a few steps toward her she wisely crowded down her own excitement.

"Good morning, Janet. You did not—not go away?"

"No," said Janet; "different things came in my way."

"And who?"—asked Bertha, motioning toward the now disappearing funeral train.

"A poor girl who died of consumption. She had one of the upper rooms, and it was hot, so toward the last we brought her down here."

Bertha drew a long breath.

"Janet," she said, "perhaps I have been one of the 'things' that came in your way. I can never tell you how sorry and ashamed I am for my carelessness. No, don't say a word; there is no excuse for me. And now—when are you going away?"

"I have about given it up. The chance I had at a good, cheap place is gone."

"Then I shall arrange something else for you. Yes, you must let me or I shall think you have not forgiven me."

"I have had my lesson," said Bertha to herself as she walked home. "I shall never forget it, for I know now how an opportunity looks from its lost side."—Sydney Dayer in the Congregationalist.

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. YOUR MONEY SPENT

Does not always mean your money invested,—as it should. There is a great difference between spending one's money and investing the same. You may spend one hundred dollars in many different ways, and still not have a penny invested,—as it should be.

When you put your money into a savings bank, it is invested,—it bears interest,—it is well expended,—you get it back again. That is money invested,—as it should be.

When you have a suit of clothes made in proper style, and in the proper way, it is money invested,—as it should be. That is the way we make clothes—in proper style, and in the proper way.

Missing.

Our children they number—well, seven,
There's Richard, the lawyer, you see,
And Asher, the doctor; while Ezra,
The scholar, has took his degree.
Then, too, there is Ivan and Linus,
And Arthur, the painter, at Rome,
But dearest of all is our Edgar—
The lad who has never come home.

He went off to war in the sixties,
With his knapsack and musket so brave!
He fought, so they told us, at Shiloh,
The papers the whole story gave,
And then after that we lost record,
His regiment was sent here and there,
And mother and I simply waited—
We couldn't give up in despair.

We had but one letter from Edgar,
All faded and yellow to-day;
It tells of some wearisome marching,
And how near the enemy lay;
And next came a terrible battle,
When half of the regiment went down!
Our poor lad was never seen after—
His mother put on a black gown.

But still I kept watching and waiting,
And can't believe Edgar is dead;
He stood just six feet in his stockings,
And his was a handsome young head,
With eyes the merriest of hazel,
Ah, yes, I remember him well!
His brown hair was glossy and curling—
It never was known that he fell.

Perhaps, he is living and happy,
And quite forgot mother and me,
He may have gone west, I am thinking,
Or stayed there in old Tennessee!
He may fill a grave 'neath the south sod—
Yes, after all, that would be best!
We couldn't bear knowing our dear lad
Was hiding away from the rest.

I still count him in with his brothers—
He's one of them, dead or alive,
Our brightest, and eldest, and bravest,
The flttest is seemed to survive.
He may be a wanderer—roofless!
The years have been many to roam,
I wait for him yet, all unknowing—
My lad who has never come home.

TWO DAYS AND NIGHTS IN THE WILDERNESS,

AND HOW I WAS RESCUED.

It is three years this present month since I had an experience which I have been asked to relate for publication. I was spending the winter in a logging camp, at Second Connecticut Lake. Having been a frequent visitor at the lake during the summer seasons, I had heard much of Camp Caribou, at Parmacheene Lake, and its proprietor, John Danforth. One day while in camp we were visited by William Smart, who said he had just been up to one of the other camps with a young lawyer from Philadelphia, who was going over to Camp Caribou.

"I wish I had known it," said I, "and I would have gone with him."

"All right," replied Smart, "he is not going until morning, and if you wish, we will take an early start and I will drive you over to the camp."

Anxious to make the trip, we rose and took breakfast with the lumbermen at 5 o'clock, and at 6 o'clock we were in the cutters, en route for the other camp. It seemed as though we met every team in the woods, and all of them in the worst places, but we finally reached the camp, only to be told that the gentleman and his guide had been gone about one hour. My first thought was to abandon the project, but having undertaken the journey I decided to persevere, and with two doughnuts in my pocket for a lunch took to the trail like a bloodhound, and followed it as closely.

About 9 o'clock it began to snow, and continued all day and most of the night. The trail, however, was easily followed, and I patiently continued my journey until 2.30 in the afternoon, when I came to a place on the Magalloway river, called Little Boys Falls. The storm had increased, and the snow had filled the trail completely, so that it was utterly impossible to find any signs whatever of it. No one had ever told me of this river, and where to go or what to do I did not know. I went to the right and then to the left, but finding no trace of the men crossed over the river, looking for signs on the opposite side; but alas, there were no signs given. It was now 3.30 in the afternoon, and being somewhat weary from my journey I sat down to rest and decide upon further movements. I cannot describe the feeling which came over me while there, but suffice it to say it was not very pleasant, and I threw myself down in the snow to freeze and die. While lying there, nearly covered with the snow, something said to me: "This is suicide; arise, do what you can, and trust God for results." Encouraged by this thought I arose and asked God to help me. The only feasible thing to do was to take my back tracks, and while it seemed like a hopeless task to reach camp that night, yet I set out with that determination.

I had no difficulty in following my trail so long as daylight lasted, but when that was gone I was again in trouble and compelled to stop. I was now in the old logging works, and there being some uprooted trees near the trail I went to them for shelter. Underneath these was an opening, and with one of my snow-shoes for a shovel I began making it larger. Having dug away the snow until I came to the turf-covered roots of the trees and thus prepared my camp, I then set out in search of my birch bark and wood. The first was soon found, but owing to my excited condition, I was unable for a long time to locate my newly-made camp, but when I had found it I lighted a torch and gathered limbs from the old tree tops. With a good supply of fuel I began to build a fire, when to my surprise I found my matches were all wet save three, which I had in a small matchbox. The first one was tested just in season to be blown out by a gust of wind, the second failed to kindle the bark, and I was reduced to the brimstone end of my last match. With this little ray of hope I scratched cautiously, but successfully, and soon had a good fire, together with dry matches and clothing. I spent the night gathering leaves and watching them burn.

Contrary to my expectations, the hours passed very rapidly, and to my surprise it it was fifteen minutes past 4 in the morning when I had thought it might be about 10 in the evening. Having a good pile of coals and two hot stones at the bottom of my fire, I put on more limbs and curled up for a nap. It was short, but refreshing, and when well shaken by old Jack Frost I arose, and as best I could tried to resuscitate my fire, but the wind had changed, and so had the purpose of my chimney, and the result was I got a hot cinder in each eye, closing the left one completely and the right one partially.

It was now 6 o'clock, and in this one-eyed condition I started out to find my trail, which I had lost the night before. To my surprise, it was easily found and followed, until it led over a steep hill, and as I wanted to save all my strength I attempted to go around the hill, but in my efforts to do this unconsciously crossed my trail, and after traveling until 30 minutes past 9, came around to the very place where I had lodged the night before. A second time I set out and went to the hill, but in my attempt to be a little wiser I went on the other side of it, and to my surprise had soon made a circle to the right, coming a second time to my camping place at half-past 10. Once more I realized the horror of being lost, but assured of the fact that God helps those who help themselves, I set out again for the hill. Just before reaching it I saw an old logging road, and thinking it to be the old tote road from the Second Lake to Parmacheene, resolved to take a short cut and reach one of the lakes. I had not gone far, however, when I came to an old lumber camp, which I supposed was the half-way camp, formerly used by the tote teams going to and from Parmacheene, and as there was plenty of straw in the hovel, I went in and refreshed myself by taking a nap. I awoke at 11 o'clock, nearly frozen, and at once started, as I thought, on the direct road to the first lake. Soon I came to a girdled tree and it occurred to me that this was the one marked by sportsmen, indicating where to turn off for Second Lake. Following this trail, I soon came to a high hill which I located as Basebuck Mountain, just back of Ed Blair's camp, from where I started the day before. It was now 1 o'clock and, as I felt sure of my way, I attempted to climb this hill and see the sights, but before half-way up lost off my snow shoes and got into the snow head downward, in which position I expected to spend my last moments. How I recovered myself I cannot tell, but once on my snow shoes I gave up the idea of sight-seeing and went down the mountain.

At the foot of this mountain there was an open brook, where I got my first drink of water. Here also were signs of civilization in that there was a hand-rail across the brook, but having drank very heartily of the water I was bewildered, and lest I should lose consciousness held on to this hand-rail until I regained my strength. To my surprise there was a spotted tree near by, and although it indicated a trail, yet it went directly opposite the way I was going. I decided, however, to follow that trail and either living or dead be found by some one. After a long, hard tramp of three hours, I reached the top of a hill, and while sitting there discovered a small camp. My first impressions were that it was the old camp where I had taken the nap, but upon closer inspection I saw a stove-pipe sticking out through the roof, and with the bound of a deer I was upon my feet and in front of John Danforth's so-called back camp. Looking for some weak place to enter, but finding none, I removed a snow shoe, and for once in my life kicked, and that successfully, too, for soon the shutter to the door gave way, and I was inside, taking account of stock. Noticing the woolen blankets hanging upon a wire across the camp and the table with a pail upon it, I removed its cover to see what was inside. To my satisfaction it was molasses, and being the first filling stuff I had seen for two days, I filled up. There was plenty of dry wood in camp, so I built a fire, and like a foolish fellow went to the pond just in front to cut through two feet of ice for water, but before I had chopped a great while my strength failed me and with great difficulty I gathered up some ice, and crawled back to camp. I put the ice in the tea-kettle, but to raise it to the stove was more than I could do. In this exhausted condition I inhaled the hot air from the stove and soon was all right again, and having put the tea-kettle upon the stove, began to examine a big box near by. One blow with the axe raised the cover, and there to my joy, were groceries enough to last a month. I fried some pork and flapjacks, made a pot of tea, and supper was ready. After I had taken that drink of water about noon, I was very thirsty, and to quench my thirst, ate snow, which by the way was a very bad thing to do, as it chilled my stomach. No sooner had I taken a drink of that hot tea, than I was all drawn up with cramps, while my stomach felt as though it would burst, and in this condition I took to the blankets. After a brief nap I awoke, fully conscious of the location of my stomach, and of the disturbing elements therein (molasses and strong tea). The fire had gone out, the camp was cold, and there I stood, a fit subject for an artist. Presently my eye rested upon some pickles, and helping myself to them as freely as I did to the molasses settled my sickness, and oh dear me, how hungry I was! I built the fire, warmed the flapjacks, made new tea, and soon was the happiest man in that whole region.

Supper being over I retired for the night, but I had scarcely covered my head with the blankets when I heard the creaking of snow-shoes, and a voice saying "Are you in here?" To which I replied, "I am, and there is room for more." To my surprise, it was Ed Blair, boss of the lumber camp, and John Huggins, guide of the lawyer to Camp Caribou.

My rescue, briefly told, was as follows: Huggins returning from Camp Caribou next morning, passed my camping place about 10 o'clock and reached Blair's camp at 2 o'clock. Inquiry being made as to how the minister stood his journey the reply was, "I haven't seen him." At once the horn was sounded, and the workmen ran for the camp to ascertain the trouble. It was decided that Mr. Blair and Huggins should go in search of the lost minister. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, with a good supply of food and blankets, they set out. Huggins led the way to my camping place, and there they found my track, which they followed until 8 o'clock, when Huggins gave out, and was obliged to camp. Blair went on, until he came to the trail, which he knew led to Rump Pond camp, and then returned for Mr. Huggins. Animated by the report of Blair, Huggins soon made ready for the journey and reached the camp at ten minutes past nine.

Next morning we left Rump Pond camp at 6 o'clock, and soon were in the tote road from Chesham, Can., to Camp Caribou. In my effort to extricate myself from the snow the day previous I sprained my knee, and it now gave out entirely. Blair remained with me, while Huggins started for Camp Caribou to get a sled to draw me in on, but ere he had been gone 20 minutes he met Louis Bragg, with four horses on his way to Canada for hay. Danforth and Denniston were with him, going to Rump Pond Camp. Huggins returned with the team and for the first time I saw John Danforth, who wrapped me in his own blankets and sent me to his home, where I remained a welcome guest for nearly four weeks, when he guided me safely back to Ed Blair's logging camp.

A HUSTLER.

Stuttering Old Gentleman (entering dentist's office)—"I wu-wu-would like a tut tut—"

Young Dentist—"Quite right!" (Seizes visitor, shoves him into operating chair and grabs for forceps.) "Which is—Ah, I see! Out she comes." (Pulls tooth.) "One dollar, please!"

Old Gentleman—"But, cuc-cuc-confound you, sir, I dud-dud—I dud didn't want a tut-tut-tooth pulled!"

Dentist—"Well, what did you want, then?"

Old Gentleman—"I am Mum-Mum-Miss Brisk's fuf-fuf—I'm her father, just retut-tut-returned from abroad. Sh-Sh-She has tut-told me abub-bub-bout your pup-proposal of mum-mum-marriage, and I came up to huh-have a tut-tut—a ten-minutes' chat with you about it."

Dentist (regretfully)—"Then, I suppose this settles it. I love her, but can hardly expect you to give your consent after—"

Old Gentleman—"Wu-Wu-Well, I don't know about that. It was pup-pup—it was pup-pretty rough on me. But I gug-guess you'll be able to support her in gug-good style. You are a-bu-bu-hustler. Take her, mum-mum-my boy!"—Puck.

JIM, THE ERRAND BOY.

"Papa," said little Nellie Ward, climbing upon her father's knee, "what pleases you so much to-day? You have been smiling to yourself all dinner time."

"Something has pleased me to-day, Nellie, and if you and your mamma care to hear the story I will tell you what has made me happy."

"A story?" said Mrs. Ward, looking up from her work.

"Well, Nellie, my story is about a boy about your age. He said he was twelve, but he is larger and more robust looking than you, my little puss. It is six months since I first saw him.

"I was busy one afternoon last winter, when I saw a little boy coming into the store whose face attracted my attention at once. It was a bright and honest face, if ever I saw one. The boy was poorly clad, but his clothes were clean and whole.

"'May I see the boss?' he asked.

"'I am the boss,' I answered; 'what can I do for you?'

"'I called to ask the price of a firstrate sewing machine; not a fancy one, but a good, substantial one.'

"'Forty dollars,' said I.

"'Can I have one and work it out?' he asked earnestly. 'I have every afternoon from three until seven, and I could run errands or do any work about the store. You see, sir, how it is, father died a year ago, and mother wants me to stay at school two or three years longer; but she has to work awful hard to keep me there. Mother owns the little house we live in, and that is all. Sometimes she keeps one or two boarders, and she sews some for other people, so I thought I would try and earn her a sewing machine.'

"'But it will take a long time,' said I. 'If I give you a dollar a week it will take forty weeks.'

"'Will you give so much?' he asked, his eyes fairly dancing.

"'Yes; and if you do well I will let you have the machine for a little less than retail price.'

"'You see, Nellie, I was interested in the boy, and resolved if he was faithful in his duties to help him along. Every day he came, punctual to the minute, rain or shine. He was the most prompt and willing errand boy I ever employed. Little by little the dollars rolled up on the account, until one evening, some time ago, he came running after me as I was on my way home from the store. As he came up to me he handed me a roll of bills which I thought safe in my pocket.

"'I found this, sir, under the counter. Please see if it is all right.'

"'I counted the notes—three hundred dollars—and then taking out two tens, I said:—

"'I should have offered a reward for this, Jim, if you had not found it.'

"'I am glad I saved you that, sir,' he answered, as he turned to leave me.

"'You have earned the reward,' I said, handing him the money.

"'Mine! all that!' he exclaimed, in surprise. 'Please keep it toward the machine. You see I'd have to tell mother where I got the money, and the machine is to be a surprise.'

"'I never spent twenty dollars with so much pleasure in my life, Nellie! This was a great lift on that machine, and this afternoon, when Jim came, I told him to select one for his mother.

"'We selected a first-class machine—handsome, too—and I promised him a teacher should go and show his mother how to use it.

"'When it was on the cart, ready to go, I invited myself to go with Jim to see it delivered. He asked me to write a note telling his mother that it had been honestly earned; but I told him that I would tell her. So we went, and when we reached the little house Jim opened the door very softly, and the man carried the machine into the parlor.

"'Then Jim led me into a small sitting-room at the back of the house, where a pale woman in a widow's dress sat busily sewing.

"'She rose and offered me a chair, and I told her I had come to see if I could obtain Jim's services at five dollars a week. You should have seen the boy's eyes.

"'He can go to evening school,' I said, 'and I will see that he has some time to read and study. 'I cannot spare him now, having had his services so long.'

"'My afternoons and Saturdays, mother,' Jim said, 'I told you I was not in mischief; I was earning you a present. Come and see,' and he fairly danced into the parlor, his mother and I following.

"'It's yours,' he said, dancing around the machine; "all paid for, and lessons on it, too. Ain't it splendid?'

"'His mother was as delighted as he had expected, and that is saying a good deal.

"'Oh, sir,' she said to me, 'he's been a good son since his father died; every step he can save me he does. But how did he ever earn money enough to pay for that machine out of school hours?'

"'I got a dollar a week, mother, for errands; and when there was snow on the walks, or other odd jobs, I earned from twenty to forty cents extra, and Mr. Ward gave me twenty dollars.'

"'No, you earned that as well as the rest,' I said, and his mother fairly cried when I told her about the roll of money.

"So, Nellie, now you know what pleases me so much to-day. He will make a noble man, for the boy who can work steadily and faithfully for such an object as Jim had, and never spend any of it for his own pleasure, is to be honored."

"But, papa," said Nellie, "why didn't you give him the machine?"

"Because the pleasure would not have been so great to either Jim or his mother. Think how proud she will be of her good son every time she looks at her machine."

"Any mother would be proud of such a son," said Mrs. Ward, gently, "and some time you must give him a holiday to spend with us; we will be glad to see him, won't we, Nellie?"

There was a hearty "Yes, ma'am," and then Nellie, thanking her father for the story, opened her school books and went busily to her duties for the evening, and wondering a little if she could have the patience, self-denial and industry of little Jim.—Sunshine.

HIDING THE CHILDREN.—A ticket examiner entered a compartment wherein a respectably dressed lady was comfortably seated. He did not notice a long, flat package lying on the opposite seat, covered with a traveling rug, and a newspaper carelessly thrown over it, and he probably would have left the compartment oblivious of its existence had not a pair of sweet, pretty eyes peeped over the top and in a cautious tone the owner of them inquired:

"Mamma, has the man gone yet?"

The artful mother confusedly explained that her child was only three and entitled to travel free, but curiosity impelled him to further investigation, and a robust young girl of apparently ten revealed herself.—London Tit-Bits.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

LITTLE THINGS.

A good-by kiss is a little thing,
With your hand on the door to go,
But it takes the venom out of the sting
Of a thoughtless word or a cruel fling
That you made an hour ago.

A kiss of greeting is sweet and rare
After the toil of the day,
And it smooths the furrows ploughed by care,
The lines on the forehead you once called fair,
In the years that have flown away.

'Tis a little thing to say "You are kind,
I love you, my dear," each night,
But it sends a thrill through the heart, I find;
For love is tender, as love is blind,
As we climb life's rugged height.

We starve each other for love's caress,
We take, but we do not give;
It seems so easy some soul to bless,
But we dole the love grudgingly, less and less,
Till 'tis bitter and hard to live.

COLLEGE SETTLEMENTS.

It is my purpose in this writing to briefly outline the history and purpose of the College Settlements. The College Settlement association is an organization consisting mainly of women banded together as the constitution states, "for the support and control of College Settlements." A College Settlement is a home of educated women placed in a city among the poorer and less fortunate inhabitants for the purpose of helping the people in its vicinity to better things in life than they have ever known or than they are able in their present circumstances to attain. There are three college settlements over which this association has control: One in New York, one in Philadelphia, and one in Boston. Beside these there are independent settlements, the purposes of which are like those of the association settlements. Among the best known are the Hull House in Chicago, the Andover House and the University Settlement in Boston. If I am correctly informed the last two have men and women residents, while the others have only women residents. There are eleven female colleges whose faculty, alumnae and students belong to the association of which Wellesley, Smith and Vassar have the largest memberships; there are also non-collegiate members, and a few men members, graduates and students of other colleges. The number of full membership is 756. The membership fee is $5 annually. There are also partial memberships, that is several students form a club say of five, each paying one dollar, the five students constituting one complete membership, so that there are really many more members than the statistics credit the association with. The membership fees and donations last year amounted to $1181.50. The government of the association is in the hands of an electoral board, chosen from its membership by its members. I quote from the second annual report of the board:

"The College Settlements Association was formed in the spring of 1890. There are many reasons of expediency for placing the control of the movements towards College Settlements for women in the hands of an association; the chief reason, however, lay above the sphere of the expedient. The association exists indeed to furnish financial support to the Settlements, but this is neither its only nor its highest object. It aims to bring college women within the scope of a common purpose and a common work. A college settlement has a two-fold value. Its first aim is direct and obvious. It concentrates its power on the definite effort to bring brightness and help to a limited neighborhood. Such is and must remain its primary and in one sense its highest ambition. Its greatest privilege is in simplest humane fellowship, its best work must always be performed in silence, far from the glare of publicity, and its results can never be measured, yet there is another aspect to the work of a Settlement. Seeking immediate use, it affects remote issues. It aims at direct helpfulness to the poor among whom its lot is cast; it achieves helpfulness less direct yet possibly more potent to the cultured, from whom its strength is drawn. The education of our college women is one of the great missions of College Settlements. Less enticing to those facing the grim realities of practical poverty than direct devotion to obvious need, this work is yet fraught with a wider hope for the future. For in the awakened intelligence and consecration of the cultured class lies, after all, the most serious promise for the success of that great movement towards social reconstruction in the midst of which we live. A College Settlement by its very existence possesses a quickening power. This power is, of course, deepest and, most permanent in the case of the residents, but it is not confined to them. To extend the educating power to the settlement idea is the object of the College Settlements Association. The association would unite all college women and all who count themselves our friends, in the trend of a great modern movement; would touch them with a common sympathy, and inspire them with a common ideal. Especially is it well that the young students still in college should join those older students whose university is the outer world, and should be quickened in their years of vague aspiration and purely speculative energy by possessing a share in a broad practical work."

The first college settlement was made in New York in 1890; the second in Philadelphia in April 1892. The Boston house has just been opened. The residents having fitted up a house tastefully and comfortably in a section of a city where it seems they may make themselves helpful, they set themselves to become acquainted with their neighbors and to study their needs; beginning in a small way they broaden their work as their experience and opportunities broaden.

The Hull House on West Halsted street was opened by two young women in 1889. This is a private enterprise. The residents pay their personal expenses, give their time and conduct the work upon their own responsibility; they are assisted by contributions of money and necessary articles like furniture and clothing from wealthy people in Chicago and by outside workers. This year there have been nine residents. As the pioneer experiment, as its purposes are kindred to those of the College Settlements, the Hull House is always named as a College Settlement, although one of its workers said "This is not a College Settlement, it is a Social Settlement."

The New York and Philadelphia settlements have had each a summer home to which visitors from among the people, especially the children and young people, in their neighborhood have been invited; the New York settlement for two summers, the Philadelphia last summer. Those of these visitors who are able, pay something for their expenses and help about the housework at the house. In future papers I hope to give the nature of the work in each of the College Settlements, and tell something of the plans and also of the details of the work.

What is being done by the Hull House Settlement and by the New York Settlement is exactly what many of the working people in the mills and faatories of manufacturing villages like Palmer, Monson, Ware and Thorndike ought to have done for them. There is no need of college settlements in these town. There are people of leisure, of culture and means, living often on the same street with hard working people who do not need money, but who do need sympathy and encouragement, and stimulus to higher social, intellectual and spiritual living. There are no doubt those in these villages who long to help others less fortunate socially yet who do not know how to help. The principles and meth

THE TOWN'S FINANCIAL STANDING.

What the Figures in the Annual Town Report Will Show.

The annual report of the town officers, which will be ready for distribution at the town meeting next Monday, will show the following:

The treasurer's report shows the total receipts to have been $57,613.57, and the expenditures to have been $55,434.24, leaving a balance of $2179.33 on hand, against $3140.15 a year ago.

The selectmen report the replanking of seven of the principal bridges of the town and the repairing of others, so that but little bridge work will be necessary the coming year. A considerable portion of the road money the past year has been expended in hardening some of the worst places, and liberal appropriations for highways are recommended. Following out the vote of the town a year ago arrangement has been made for the separating of the grade of the highway and the tracks of the New London Northern Railroad at the Ferrell crossing, the highway to pass under the tracks and the work to be done early this spring. In the matter of separating the grades at the Burleigh crossings, the railroad has asked for a delay until more of the changes on the main line are completed, and in view of the heavy expense the town has already been to in the matter of such changes the selectmen have not urged immediate action. The appropriations for the use of the selectmen, and the expenditures, have been:—

| | Appropriation. | Expended. |
|---|---|---|
| Contingencies | $3650 | $3199.94 |
| Highways | 4000 | 4223.65 |
| Bridges | 1500 | 1287.43 |
| Culverts | 600 | 337.98 |
| Railings | 300 | 186.75 |
| Bank wall, Bondsville | 500 | 432.75 |
| New road near E. B. Gates's | 100 | 98.00 |
| Old cemetery at Palmer Center. | 50 | 41.50 |
| Prosecuting illegal liquor sales. | 500 | 45.00 |

There are claims against the town of $20,666.40, and there is due the town $3776.81, leaving the net indebtedness of the town only $16,889.59. The selectmen make the following recommendations:

|---|---|
| Contingencies | $3500 |
| Highways | 4400 |
| Bridges | 1000 |
| Sewers and culverts | 600 |
| Railings | 300 |

The tax collector reports only $109.23 uncollected.

The overseers of the poor announce the inventory of the property at the town farm as $2005.88, or an increase of $343.01 over last year. The whole number of inmates at the farm during the year has been 15, and the average 12, the weekly cost of support being $1.67 per head. The overseers have received, from the town of Palmer and other towns, $5781.85, and have drawn orders for $5825.92, or $44.07 more than the money on hand. To offset this there is $225.16 due from the state and the town of Spencer. The board recommends an appropriation of $5000 for the support of the poor, and $300 as a contingent fund. The items in their report are as follows:

|---|---|
| Support of poor not on town farm | $3830.13 |
| Support of poor on town farm | 1039.99 |
| Repairs | 160.29 |
| Poor belonging to the state | 394.80 |
| Poor belonging to other towns | 193.56 |
| Tramp room | 207.21 |

The number of tramps lodged was 312.

The Young Men's Library Association asks for a more liberal appropriation than formerly on the ground that the heating and lighting of the new building takes so much of the usual amount that there is nothing left for the purchase of new books, which is of course desirable if the library is to be kept up to the needs of its patrons.

The school committee reports a gradual improvement in the attendance of the schools, and in several other directions. Fewer changes among the teachers are recommended, and the payment of such salaries as will retain the best is advised. The raising of the grade necessary for admission to the high school is suggested, necessitating more advanced work in the grammar rooms. More attention to English literature has been paid in the high school the last year, which is considered a step in advance. Of this school the committee says: "We judge a tree by its fruits. We may judge the work of a teacher by the inspiration given to the pupils after leaving school to seek higher attainments in culture. * * * It is doubtful whether there are many towns of the size of Palmer that have more students in the higher institutions of learning." In regard to the statement that the town of Palmer pays more for schools in proportion to the school population than any other town in the state, the committee thinks that this will not be found true if comparison is made in the grade of the schools of the towns about Palmer, the number of children and the amount raised for school purposes. The receipts and expenditures of the committee have been as follows, leaving a balance on hand of $11.93:

| | Received. | Expended. |
|---|---|---|
| Salaries of teachers | $11,500.00 | $11,789.00 |
| Text books and supplies | 1,000.00 | 1,122.52 |
| Transportation | 1,200.00 | 1,222.00 |
| Care of houses | 800.00 | 778.71 |
| Repairs | 1,000.00 | 832.30 |
| Fuel | 1,000.00 | 2,262.45 |
| Contingencies | 500.00 | 669.20 |
| Salaries of committee | 600.00 | 600.00 |
| Salaries of teaches for 1891. | 781.64 | 781.64 |
| Dog Fund | 104.01 | |
| Merrick Fund | 34.34 | |
| Massachusetts School Fund | 218.31 | |
| Reeves, Bondsville | 16.00 | |

| Tuition, Three Rivers | 20.00 | |
| Tuition, Depot | 10.00 | |
| | $19,170.12 | $19,158.19 |

The Farmers' Institute.

Owing to the unfavorable weather the institute held last Friday at the court room was not so well attended as it should have been. Hon. W. R. Sessions, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture, was the speaker for the day. The subject of "Roads" was taken up in the morning. The speaker advocated the plan that the state should build the principal roads throughout its territory, under the direction of competent engineers. This method is pursued in Europe with grand results. In this state the tax would fall quite largely upon the cities; Boston would be called upon for nearly one-third of the amount. The cities are largely supported by the country, and why should they not benefit the rural districts by contributing something for the building and maintenance of good roads? If the example of well-constructed roads should once be set by the state it would not be long before the towns would follow suit in building and keeping the lesser roads in better condition than now. This view of the subject is well worth consideration.

In the afternoon Mr. Sessions gave a very interesting resumé of the work of the State Board of Agriculture, showing how much it had done to benefit the public as well as the farmer. The board is composed of leading men in the state, who not only take an interest in the matters of agriculture, but sustain their work by earnest and intelligent effort. But for the board the gypsy moth would ere this have overrun the state and country. The Massachusetts State Board ranks high in the estimation of other states and of foreign countries, and its literature is sought far and wide as authority. The thirty-nine volumes published by the board are a library of information for any live farmer. An index to the set will soon be issued, which will render them more available to the reader in search of any given fact.

A Little Girl Badly Hurt.

Ella Harness, the eight-years'-old daughter of Joseph Harness of West Brimfield, met with a peculiar accident while coasting near her home Tuesday morning. In some way the iron shoe of the sled runner became detached and the end entered the girl's body on the inside of the left leg close to the body, penetrating to a depth of about seven inches, upward and outward toward the left hip. The accident happened about 8 o'clock in the morning, and it was about half an hour before the girl was removed to her home by help which was summoned by her younger brother. The end of the iron was in the shape of a hook, where it had passed over the end of the sled runner, making it impossible to pull it out. A physician was summoned from West Warren, but Dr. Holbrook of this place was sent for later, and by him the iron was removed about noon, The patient was put under the influence of chloroform, and the iron, which was ⅝ of an inch in diameter, filed in two as close to the body as possible, an incision then being made in the hip and the iron pulled through. It is a wonder that the girl lived through it all, but she is now doing well, with a good prospect of full recovery.

Hadn't Money Enough for a Marriage Ceremony.

Ephraim Bucher and Della Billon, alias LaCrosse, of Palmer Center, were before the district court Tuesday for unlawfully living together, and an interesting story was brought out. Bucher is 40 and has been married once before; the LaCrosse woman is 50, and this is her third venture on the matrimonial sea. Bucher stated that about eight or nine months ago he and his wife that now is concluded to take each other for better or worse, and went to a priest of the town to be married. The priest, however, declined to tie the knot for less than $15, which was more than the would-be bridegroom possessed. He could not bear the thought of losing his blushing bride, however, and so they concluded to live together until they could raise the money, which they evidently found rather a hard matter, or perhaps were so well contented with the existing state of affairs that mere formalities did not bother them. His Honor gave them a few points as to the penalties to which they were liable, sent Bucher after a marriage license, and after marrying them dismissed them on payment of the costs incurred by the officer.

There was a hard shower Tuesday night, accompanied by vivid lightning and heavy thunder, the first of the season. Many people were wakened by the first clap of the thunder, which was particularly loud, coming about 11 o'clock.

Special arrangements have been made for conveying the voters to the polls next Monday, and special trains will leave for the town house at 8.45 a. m.,12.05 and 12.40 p. m , leaving the town house for Palmer at9.35 a m., 12.47 and 1.19 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Northrop spent part of last week with their son in Boston. Mr. Northrop saw the big fire Friday afternoon, and was a witness of the wonderful escape of Chief Egan, when he attempted to cross from one building to another on a wire cable.

The Palmer Social Club gave an invitation ball in the opera house last evening, with whist for those who did not care to dance, and the attendance was very good, an enjoyable evening being passed. The Philharmonic orchestra of Springfield furnished music.

E. B. Worrell of Boston gave an interesting and instructive talk Tuesday afternoon to a large number of the ladies of the town at the opera house on food products and their adulteration. At the close of his talk samples of the manufactures of several firms were distributed gratuitously.

A stone was thrown from the north side of the track through one of the windows of a car on the "modoc" train from the west about a mile and a half west of this station Monday morning, and one passenger had his face somewhat cut by the pieces of flying glass. The thrower of the stone was not found.

Workmen have been engaged the past week in straightening the bridge of the Boston and Albany road over Commercial street. The track at the bridge has a downgrade toward the east, and the bridge was "creeping" a little in that direction. The movement was not very much, but it is not desirable to have it move at all.

The trestle at South Willington on the New London Northern road, replacing the bridge which was burned some time ago, was so weakened by the high water of Monday as to render it unsafe, and Wednesday it was carried away, making the third time this winter that the road has been compelled to transfer passengers at that point.

The first part of the week was quite balmy; Monday and Tuesday the atmosphere was decidedly June-like, the snow disappeared as if by magic, and several bluebirds were seen. Wednesday afternoon brought a decided change, however, the mercury taking a sudden drop, which with a cold wind accompanying made quite ideal March weather.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has arranged for a union temperance meeting in the opera house Sunday evening. Rev. Mr. Moulton is to conduct the exercises, and Rev. Mr. Frost will deliver an address on "The Great Red Dragon, a Symbol of the Liquor Traffic." Music will be furnished by the combined choirs of the several churches.

An attempt is being made to secure the running of a special train to Palmer after the Paderewski concert in Springfield next Friday, and to insure it W. R. Milligan is endeavoring to sell 60 tickets for the homeward trip at 50 cents each. This is a little more than the regular fare, but even at that price it is cheaper than staying over night at a hotel. If there are any who wish to avail themselves of this train and have not tickets it is desired that they communicate with Mr. Milligan as soon as possible.

The selectmen have made a good move in calling the annual meeting of the town at 9 o'clock next Monday, an hour earlier than usual, and there would seem to be no reason why the result may not be made known at an early hour in the evening. It is probable that all articles referring to appropriations will be postponed for two weeks, as is customary. The committee of fifteen to consider the needs of the various articles in the warrant has worked so well in the past that one will probably be appointed this year.

A life-size portrait of J. F. Fenton, the clerk at the Converse House, adorns the wall of the office. It is the work of T. J. McCarty, and thereby hangs a tale. "Jim" had ordered a portrait of a Providence house, paying for it in advance. Time passed and it did not come. So the "boys" got Mr. McCarty to draw one, framed and boxed it and took it to the express office, put a Providence label on and had it delivered, with pretty steep express charges, which were paid, of course. The picture did not prove exactly satisfactory on inspection, the owner thought, and after a while he was informed of its origin, the perpetrators of the joke indulging in cigars out of the money paid for express charges.

The Ladies' Social Union of St. Paul's Universalist church gave a social in the parlors of the church Wednesday evening, which was well attended. Mrs. E. P. Ball and Mrs. W. E. Stone entertained. After supper the annual meeting of the society was held, and these officers elected: President, Mrs. F. N. Aiken; vice president, Mrs. Maria Lawrence; secretary, Miss Mina Ball; treasurer, Mrs. C. K. Gamwell; collector, Mrs. W. P. Webster. At 7.30 there was an entertainment in the parlors, consisting of selections by the newly-formed string quartette, piano solos by Miss Lucinda Howard of Ludlow, a vocal solo by Miss Mabel Smith, and readings by Miss Brigham, Miss Eloise Stone and Miss Ola Northrop.

C. L. Alexander fared hard at the hands of Alphonse Pinard, whom he was assisting to take to the insane asylum at Northampton Saturday night. Pinard became violent in the hack while going from the station to the asylum, and it was necessary to take him out and throw him down in order to get the handcuffs on his wrists. Alexander got a twister on Pinard's left wrist and had the right in his left hand, supposing that he could hold him until Officer Healey got the bracelets on, but no sooner had Pinard got on his feet than that right hand drew back and then shot out like a sledge hammer, catching Alexander square between the eyes, both of which were in mourning for a few days afterward, while "Alec" declared that his nose felt "real loose."

Thomas Benway of Thorndike was before the district court last Friday on complaint of H. A. Shaw of Three Rivers for concealing leased property, but satisfied the owner and was discharged on payment of costs. Saturday the civil case of Joseph Looney against Dr. H. B. Otis was tried, the decision being for the defendant. Alphonse Pinard of Three Rivers was adjudged insane, and committed to the hospital at Northampton. On Tuesday William Hardy was sentenced to a year at the state farm at Bridgewater for vagrancy. Hardy was sent to the house of correction at Springfield December 13th for the same offense, and had evidently only just been discharged when he struck town Monday. He declined to work in payment for his lodging over night, evidently enjoying the good care received at the state institutions better than struggling for an existence with the cold unfeeling world.

The voters of the town will make no mistake if at the polls next Monday they make a cross opposite the "no" on the question of license. It is argued that the money received from licenses last year made a material reduction in the tax rate; there is no doubt of this, though there is a serious question whether it is money saved in the long run. The argument is also made that liquor will be sold anyway, and the town might as well profit by the granting of licenses. If both of these statements are true why is it that the managers of the concerns which pay the largest taxes in the town—the mills of the different villages—are strongly in favor of no license? If the money received from licenses was of any real benefit to these manufacturers they would not be slow to see it and favor that side of the question. It is a fact that the worst enemy of the employer of labor is the saloon, and though some liquor will be sold in no license years it is not so easy to procure, the men are soberer and consequently have more money to spend on the necessities of life, which directly affects every merchant in the town. A vote for no license will mean better order on the streets, less Sunday carousing, and more peace for citizens after 11 o'clock at night, the hour at which the late hangers-on in the saloons are turned out on the street. The best results of no license are not to be had in one year, to do this the policy should be followed for a term of several years, but this year is as good as any in which to begin.

The stock in the store formerly operated by Pinard & Durand will be sold at public auction to-morrow, for the benefit of the creditors.

Miss Walker, teacher of the second intermediate department in the school, intends to spend the vacation at her home in Belchertown.

Mr. Dessaulier has opened his drug store on Main street this week, and it certainly is tastefully arranged. The room is fitted with the "Bay State" lighting system, which gives a brilliant, steady light and adds greatly to the general appearance of the building.

William Franklin, a resident of this place and a brakeman on one of the freight trains between Palmer and Brattleboro, met with a sad accident Wednesday afternoon while cars were being switched at Amherst, being caught between the couplings and so badly jammed that there is no hope of his recovery.

At the adjourned meeting of the Four Corners Cemetery Association, held at the home of M. M. Thomas in Thorndike Monday evening, the following officers were elected: President, F. A. Ruggles of Three Rivers; vice president, J. C. Green of Bondsville; secretary, Horace Paine of Three Rivers; treasurer, M. M. Thomas of Thorndike; board of directors, F. A. Ruggles, C. H. Murdock, A. M. Bond, J. C. Green, B. F. Clark; soliciting committee, Mrs. M. A. Murdock, Mrs. J. C. Green, Mrs. L. E. Moore, Mrs. Charles Russell and Miss Clara Smith. The total receipts for the year have been $113, and the expenses were $100.19. There are now 111 members. The grounds are in a creditable condition compared with a year ago, and all interested are satisfied that the organization has been a success.

Mary Labonte is visiting friends in Northampton.

The schools close to-day for a two-weeks vacation.

There are many children sick with measles, but there are no serious cases reported, and those who have been sick are getting along nicely.

A special train will leave Thorndike for the town house next Monday as follows: upper crossing at 12.20 p. m., station at 12.23. A train will leave the town house for Thorndike at 12.47.

A petition is being signed by the citizens of this place asking the town to continue the sewer on Main street to the pine grove, and another asking for the continuance of a sewer on High street from a point near Daniel Leary's property to a point opposite the residence of D. J. Sullivan, and to have the same connect with the School street sewer. Mistake has been made in putting in sewers in this place there not being half manholes enough, consequently the water remains in puddles at the side of the roads.

The members of the Non-Secret Endowment Order are hopeful of securing 80 cents on the dollar. The organization was started here on March 17th, 1890, with a list of 28 charter members. Since that time there have been many lapses, and many sick benefits drawn. The assembly at one time had about 40 members.

Politics are rather more quiet than would be expected with election so near, and it is taken for granted that the voters have already made up their minds how they will vote. Considerable prophecying is being done as to who will be the successful candidates. A combination which seems to find much favor in this village is Getchell, Twiss and Clark, while another is Clark, Twiss and Holden, but the one which will probably be elected unless the Democrats join hands, will be the straight Republican, Getchell, Clark and Holden.

Those who had the courage to face the rain and try the mud on Tuesday evening very much enjoyed the lecture, by Tomoyoshia Murai on "The Japanese Home Life." The pictures displayed by the stereopticon took one at once into the cities, then the home life, of Japan.

Pat Maloney's Irish Comedy Co. will give a performance here next Tuesday night, entitled "McFinn's Trip to the World's Fair." The company is well known here, and will no doubt draw a large audience.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 15, 1893.

A new move in the perpetual liquor warfare is that no liquor be allowed to be sold except by salaried officials appointed by the state. A petition to that effect is before the Legislature signed by Edward Everett Hale, Rev. Philip S. Maxom, Henry H. Faxon, Edward Bellamy, Mrs. Abby Morton Diaz, Mrs. Mary A. Livermore, William Lloyd Garrison, Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and many other leading people. Meantime Faxon fulminates against the proposal to introduce the Guttenburg system of sales by a monopolistic corporation which gives all the profits to public purposes above a moderate return on the capital, and says the theory "is a disgrace to civilization and honest government."

James W. Stockwell and others have petitioned for the third time for the passage of a doomage bill to punish those who do not return all their property for taxation.

The notion that the government is for the support of the people and not that it is for the people to support the government comes out occasionally in the debates in the Legislature. An instance of it appeared in the debate upon the appropriatian of $100,000 for the extermination of the gypsy moth. Mr. Golding of Boston moved to add as a condition of the appropriation that no persons should be employed in the work who were not residents of Massachusetts. But the hardhearted members of the committee on agriculture were not to be caught by any such chaff as that. They knew that the best scientific experts might live out of the state. They knew that the agricultural college students, many of whom are not necessarily residents of Massachusetts, have been employed in this work with signal success because of their scientific training. The amendment was defeated by a large vote, and so was another to reduce the appropriation from $100,000 to $75,000.

Without a syllable of discussion the House has passed the bill to make 10 hours in a consecutive 11 a day's work for railroad employes.

County taxes for 1893 will be as follows: Barnstable, $48,000; Berkshire, $75,000; Bristol, $200,000; Dukes, $7500; Essex, $246,500; Franklin, $33,000; Hampden, $130,000; Hampshire, $48,000; Middlesex, $350,000; Norfolk, $140,000; Plymouth, $85,000; Worcester, $190,700.

One lesson must be learned in consequence of the Boston fire. It is that large floor areas must be prohibited. This has been learned to the extent of forbidding any to be larger than 10,000 square feet, but now Mayor Matthews of Boston has petitioned for an amendment to reduce the size to 6000 feet, and the Senate has suspended its rule to admit the petition.

The contest is very sharp between the people who raise trout artificially and those who want to defend the wild trout from being caught in February and March. The bill to permit the raised trout to be sold in those months was hotly debated in the House and defeated on Monday, but on Tuesday there was a reconsideration and the bill had a good majority. But it may be killed in the Senate, just as the House bill was which compelled the use of fly covers for docked-tailed horses in hot weather.

The debate in the House which resulted in the defeat of the bill for eight hours for a day's work for state, county, city and town employes was characterized by a lack of definiteness on each side as far as relates to a broad treatment of the whole question. Mr. Rockwell of Fitchburg made a good showing of the bad effect of such a law as regards the department of city laborers, but in the main the arguments were merely general impressions and labor prejudices which could be brought up as convincingly on one side as on the other. For instance, Mr. Melaven of Worcester argued that as the government was anxious to get the services of unskilled labor as soldiers in the exigencies of war, therefore local governments should put unskilled labor on the same footing as skilled labor in its street and other service in time of peace. There was a general impression on the part of the friends of the bill that the community could stand it if public employes worked only eight hours a day, and a general apprehension on the part of its opponents that the community could not stand it. The latter had a margin by 98 against 70, but no priacples or facts were settled by the debate.

It is proposed to make a great spread at the World's Fair in Chicago over Massachusetts Day, which comes June 17th,—Bunker Hill day. The committee on federal relations has reported an appropriation of $17,000, and that a party be sent to Chicago to represent the state, consisting of the governor, lieutenant-governor, council, heads of the state departments, brigade and battalion commanders of the militia, the captain of the Ancients, president of the Senate, speaker of the House, committee on federal relations, a special committee of nine senators and 22 representatives, clerks and assistant clerks of the Senate and House, clerks of the council, sergeant-at-arms, and all the state house reporters. The resolve also makes the day a legal holiday for this year. Doubtless such a company would contrive to uphold the dignity of the state, provided any one could tell them how to do it so as to render an equivalent for the $17,000.

An adverse report has been made on the proposed exemption of municipal bonds from taxation, Senator Brown of Reading dissenting. A very short contest occured over this matter last year, for the country representatives are much opposed to it. The friends of the exemption figure out a clear cash saving to the cities and towns which borrow money because they can get the money at so much lower rate of interest. LANDON.

The interior of the Peoples Market is being painted by E. J. Osborn.

Patrick Maloney is booked for Memorial Hall to-morrow evening.

W. Colton has taken a position on Mr. Belden's stock afrm at Rockville, Ct.

Contractor Marcy of Palmer is to do some repairs at L. G. Cushman's farm house.

The social of the Woman's Relief Corps last Friday evening was well attended.

J. T. Stevens of Barre, formerly of the Monson House, was in town Thursday.

G. W. Burdick has returned from a visit with his son Asher, in Philadelphia, Pa.

E. F. Mills and wife of Springfield spent a few days this week with friends in town.

Rev. Father Cullen of South Framingham was the guest of Father Lee Wednesday of this week.

A. D. Ellis, who has been spending some three months South, returned home Thursday evening.

The registrars will be in session at Memorial Hall on Wednesday, March 29, from noon till 10 p. m.

Another one of the union sociables at the Methodist church was enjoyed by a goodly number last Wednesday evening.

Rev. Harry Blackford of the Universalist church exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Torsleff of Southbridge last Sunday.

The interior decorations of the bank block are fast being completed, and the Herring Co. have men working upon the vaults.

Much complaint is heard of the dangerous condition of the platform at the depot, many of the planks being badly decayed.

W. N. Flynt celebrated his 75th birthday Tuesday, receiving congratulations from 23 friends in person, besides many others by letter.

The supplement to the catalogue of the library is now being printed, and it is expected will be ready for distribution in about two weeks.

One hundred and fifteen books were drawn from the public library last Saturday, the largest number which has been taken in one day for five years.

About 250 attended the organ recital in the Congregational church Tuesday evening. The programme well served to bring out the different tones of the organ.

Mr. Norris, of Holtens & Co., Boston, was in town Wesdenday on business relative to furnishing electric fixtures for the Catholic church and the new bank building.

The dancing class under the direc ion of H. A. Holland finished its course of lessons Tuesday. There has been some talk of a reception, but it will not occur at present.

The Flynt quarry has the contract for furnishing the city of Holyoke with granite for street-curbings. The superintendent of streets of that place visited the quarries this week.

Mrs. Elvira Brooks, aged 84, died Sunday at the home of her son George. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon, Rev. W. H. Marble officiating, and the interment was in Palmer.

W. R. Milligan of Palmer has about 60 tickets at 50 cents each for a special train to be run from Springfield to Palmer after the Paderewski concert next Friday. This is a good opportunity for Monson people to get home after the concert.

The new electric lamps recently put into use on the Palmer & Monson street lighting line are appreciated, the old ones having been badly scorched after the plant was first started and consequently quite dim. There are a few more yet to be changed.

Chas. F. Orcutt has secured the control of the Monson Laundry, having taken possession this week. Mr. Orcutt has many friends in town and will no doubt make a success of this business, which should be run at a good profit provided Monson people give him their work instead of sending it out of town, as in times past. It is understood that the two agencies in town are to hand their business over to Mr. Orcutt. It is time Munson people should take up with home industry.

Mrs. Grace Stuart Lynch of Los Angeles, Cal., will give a dramatic reading in the chapel of the Congregational church this evening. The readings will be interspersed with music by local talent. The readings will be as follows:

"The Raven".....Poe
Scene from "Hamlet".....
"Lasca".....
"Her Letter".....Bret Harte
"The Hunchback".....
Selection from "Marmion".....Scott

L. R. Burrows was confined to his room a few days this week on account of an injury received while jumping, but is now attending to his school work as usual.

The Amherst Glee and Banjo Clubs drew a large crowd last Friday evening. The recitations were finely rendered in every case, and an encore was demanded each time.

The date of the public Philo and Lino has again been changed, and will come on the evening appointed for it in the catalogue, March 24th, at 7.45 o'clock. The debate: "Resolved—that contact with the world is a better developer of man than a higher education," will be discussed by Miss Squier and G. W. Brown in the affirmative, and Miss Deveren and W. Presiding Elder Thorndike held the fourth quarterly conference in the Methodist church last Sabbath afternoon. The year is closing with all departments of church work in excellent condition. The pastor has been invited to return for the fifth year.

LUDLOW.

At the town meeting Monday, it was voted that in future the meetings should be held at the village instead of at the Center, though the fight against the change was determined and the vote close. These officers were elected:

LUDLOW CENTER.

Seven members of Ludlow Grange attended the Springfield District Grange at West Springfield Wednesday. The morning session was devoted to the discussion of our country roads, and the afternoon question was "Is the agricultural college a benefit to the farmer?" which was opened in the affirmatfve by W. M. Porter of Agawam, the negative being taken by Mr. Austin of Suffield, Ct., followed by others on either side of the question. A vote was taken, resulting in the affirmative, both as to the merit of the question and weight of argument.

At a meeting of the First church parish Tuesday it was voted to accept the resignation of Rev. M. P. Dickey. Resolutions were presented by C. L. Buell, expressing regret for the loss of such a faithful servant of the Master, which step he has taken owing to the sad condition of the schools in town. The pastor, the church and parish committee then concurred on the following churches to sit in the council next Tuesday at 2 o'clock p. m., for dismissal: Wilbraham, North Wilbraham, Ludlow Village, Granby, Evangelical of Indian Orchard, Hope and Olivet of Springfield, Rev. Heart Disease Curable.

The truth of this statement may be doubted by many, but when Dr. Franklin Miles, the eminent Indiana specialist, claims that heart disease is curable and proves it by thousands of testimonials of wonderful cures by his New Heart Cure, it attracts the attention of the millions suffering with short breath, palpitation, irregular pulse, wind in stomach, pain in side or shoulder, smothering spells, fainting, dropsy, etc. A. F. Davis, Silver Creek, Neb., by using four bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, was completely cured after twelve years' suffering from heart disease. This wonderful remedy is sold by LeGro & Lynde. Books free.

Nervous Prostration.

A large manufacturer, whose affairs were very much embarrassed, and who was overworked and broken down with nervous exhaustion, went to a celebrated specialist. He was told that the only thing needed was to be relieved of care and worry, and have a change of thought. This doctor was more considerate of his patient's health than of his financial circumstances. He ought to have advised him to use Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the best remedy for nervous prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, headache, ill effects of spirits, tobacco, coffee, opium, etc. Thousands testify to cures. Book and trial bottle free at LeGro & Lynde's. (5)

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The Messoniers of Oriental Art,
At Public Auction.
Treasures from the Palace Halls, Mosques and Harems of the Old World.

Admirers of the beautiful and artistic in household decoration will be greatly interested in the fine display of valuable antique and oriental rugs made by Forbes & Wallace of Springfield. A catalogue comes to us to-day; anybody can get a copy by writing for it. This collection is large and varied, comprising nearly 400 pieces of different sizes, shapes and kinds; and will be sold at public auction Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week. The rugs vary, of course, in age and value.

An eye that is once accustomed to recognize the peculiar Oriental character in a rug, and understand the mystic language it seems to speak can make no mistake, and is not likely to be imposed upon. The peculiar charm and characteristic of these rugs are their perfect naturalness. The soft yet deep colors, the strength of texture, and the charming irregularity of the most perfect designs suggest the beauty of natural scenery, and are equally unmistakable. Even if one has no thought of buying the educational benefit to be derived from this exhibition is very considerable.

A magnificent treat.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday of this week, we hold in our upholstery rooms an exhibition of what is said to be the most magnificent collection of Oriental rugs ever brought to this country.

Some of the pieces are of the richest and most luxurious character, representing a lost art never to be produced again; for the patterns and colorings are from designs which were perfected in the days when Damsaucs, Ninevah and Babylon were all in their glory. ## Secretary Windom's

Last Words Should be Read by All who Value Good Health and Happiness.

Secretary Windom, in his last speech, delivered in New York city before the leading financial men of this country, said "that poison in the blood permeates arteries, veins, nerves, brain and head, and speedily brings paralysis and death." He but issued a warning that should be heeded by every person, old and young. It is impossible for the human body to grow strong and vigorous with deadly poison lurking there.

Science has given us a corrective in the form of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, which will cleanse the blood of all impurities and restore the weak and debilitated system to health and vigor.

Mrs. Annie Barton, Catskill, N. Y., says, "It is the best medicine I have ever known for purifying the blood, for it cured my husband of running ulcers of the leg when skilled physicians failed to do him any good."

From the common face pimple to that most dreaded of all skin diseases, scrofula, it is the master of, and will cure, the most stubborn cases. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is not a new decoction recently put on the market, but an old and tried medicine, and is the household remedy in nearly every home in the eastern states for the cure of kidney and liver complaint, salt rheum, erysipelas, rheumatism, and all the ills that are brought about by impure blood.

Mr. John R. Stephenson of Albany, N. Y., writes that Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is a wonderful medicine, and for sick or bilious headache or derangement of the stomach it has no equal on the face of the earth.

THE NEXT MORNING I FEEL BRIGHT AND NEW AND MY COMPLEXION IS BETTER.

My doctor says it acts gently on the stomach, liver and kidneys, and is a pleasant laxative. This drink is made from herbs, and is prepared for use as easily as tea. It is called

Modern cutlers despair of reproducing the ancient sword blades of feudal Japan, as modern artificers in iron despair of imitating the artistic sword guards of that country. According to tradition the test of the ancient Japanese sword was even more rigid than that of Saladin's blades. It was enough if the latter would cut in twain at a single blow a down pillow thrown in air, but the Japanese blade, suspended horizontally beneath a tree, must sever any leaf that, falling, should accidentally light upon the edge of the weapon.—Indianapolis News.

THE MAIN PURPOSE OF PAINT is to preserve; a secondary one to beautify. Wood is subject to decay, metals to rust, stone to scale and crumble. Paint prevents these. How well or for how long depends on the quality of the paint. A good pure linseed oil paint with the finest turpentine driers and well ground colors, is known as "Chilton" brand, and it is only another name for perfection in paints. It is so well and carefully made, that half a gallon of it will cover properly almost as much surface as a gallon of other paint. Besides this, it preserves from decay for a longer time any material it covers. It has a good solid body, gives a beautiful gloss to the work, and earns admiration wherever it is used. Only reliable dealers sell it. You can make an arrangement with them that they will allow what you paid for all unopened packages which you return in good condition. Thus you have no paints for future generations to stumble over in the cellar. If you want to paint your house economically and well and not have to paint again for years, use Chilton. ## Col. Sillowaye Speaks.

What a Colonel of General McClellan's Staff Says.

He Saved President Lincoln from Capture.

He Was the Preserver Also of John Jacob Astor.

Col. William A. H. Sillowaye is 60 years old. He resides at Bellows Falls, Vt., and is connected with the Bellows Falls Times. He has something of the most vital interest to say to his fellow soldiers of the G. A. R., and to his fellow men the world over.

In "Rifle Shots and Bullet Shells," there can be found a sketch of Col. Sillowaye, wherein it is shown that he indirectly saved the Union, when, in 1863, he prevented the capture of Lincoln by the Confederates. He also saved John Jacob Astor from a similar fate in 1862, in the Peninsular campaign. Col. Sillowaye served four years and eight months in the army and navy during the war, and from April 1861, to February, 1863, he served his country without pay or reward of any kind.

He knew all the Union generals and Secretary Stanton and Mr. Welles. He was lieutenant-colonel on Gen. McClellan's staff in 1862. Col Sillowaye is a practical printer, engineer and linguist. He has set up works in Greek, French, Spanish, Latin and Hebrew. He was employed during five years at Oxford, Eng., on Homan's Greek Bible, and there, in 1859, the degree of LL.D. was conferred upon him. His first wife was a daughter of Sir William Blackie and niece of Sir Richard Houghton. His present wife is a relative of Hon. William M. Evarts, and a very gifted lady.

Col. Sillowaye is a very modest man, and only consented to talk to the writer after it was shown that it would be criminal for him to keep his knowledge to himself while others suffered.

So here is his story as it fell from his lips. He saw it written out and he indorsed every word of it.

"On the 19th of April, 1861, I enlisted in the army of the North. I weighed 162 pounds. After serving four years and eight months in the army and navy, and suffering from wounds and rheumatism I was discharged. I weighed the day I was discharged

COL. SILLOWAYE.

109 pounds. Every year I had attacks of nervous prostration; shortness of breath, and loss of appetite were not the least of my misfortunes. I tried numberless things. Nothing did me any good.

While employed in Boston, I was compelled to resign my position on account of ill health. I consulted several eminent physicians and took their medicines. No use—I grew worse day after day. They told me I could not live. I could not walk alone in the street without falling or clinging to railings. At times I would shake and twitch. Had spells of falling down in the office and on the street. In the house I had to lie down or drop down. Several times I believed I was at death's door.

I had been commander of three different G. A. R. Posts and my comrades advised me to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I bought a bottle and when I had taken two-thirds of it I began to improve. I kept on taking it, improving all the time. I now weigh 130 pounds and feel like my old self again.

You can put it in your paper that I attribute my good health to nothing but Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I am perfectly satisfied that it saved my life. I am 60 years of age, but, as you can see for yourself, I am as active as a man of 40 and can do a good day's work, as people here well know. My friends in Boston, New York and other places are surprised at my recovery. Indeed, I am surprised myself to be so well. I advise everybody afflicted to buy and try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy at once."

At this season of the year when everybody needs and is using a spring medicine, we advise the use of this wonderful health restorer. It is by all odds the best spring medicine ever discovered, and immediately invigorates the blood, strengthens the nerves and restores a healthy action of all the organs.

Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is as harmless as it is good, and it is purely vegetable. It sells at $1 per bottle. Physicians recommend it to their patients as it is not a patent medicine. It is the discovery of that eminent specialist, Dr Greene, who can be consulted personally or by letter, at 34 Temple place, Boston, Mass., at all times.

Maud Muller in Winter.

Maud Muller on a winter day
Went out upon the snow to sleigh.

Singing she slode, and her merry glee
Shook the snow all off the tree.

"Wait till the clouds roll by!" she howled,
And as she passed the people scowled.

On her dexter side sat a fresh young dude,
With his arm out of place as they sweetly slude.

But her howling died, and a vague distress
And a quart of snow filled the back of her dress.

For the reins were held in a careless hand,
And the basest drum in a parade's band.

Alas! for the dude; three cheers for the sleigh!
And hurrah for the chestnuts that ran away.

The saddest words at her father's door
Were these, "You needn't come back no more."

The livery bill when he hied him thence
Was $17.50.

A LIGHTNING SHOT.

"You must move on. I have billydallied on your motion long enough. I must have this land for a sheep pasture. You understand?"

Yes, Caleb Rawson and his mother understood.

It was hard to be driven from the home they had occupied several years and which Nathan Rawson had believed his when he died a few months before. His last words were, "I am thankful that I leave you a comfortable home Mary, for you and Caleb."

He had passed into the beyond with this belief, and now the rich cattle king, Silas Gudgeon, whose vast estate joined theirs on the west, had found a flaw in Rawson's title and had secured the land and ordered the widow and her son to get off the place.

"I want no more fooling, Mrs. Rawson," declared the cattle king as he turned to leave the room. "If you and this impudent boy of yours [aren't outside of here inside of 24 hours, my man will throw you out, neck and heels."

And then the hard money getter strode from the room, leaving the widow in tears, and Caleb white with righteous anger.

"The mean old skinflint!" exclaimed the boy. "I—I could kill him!"

"Hush, my son," uttered the mother in a shocked voice, "you must not feel like that. It is as bad as murder."

"I can't help it," rejoined the boy. "This is our home, that we have enjoyed for three years. Over there father lies, and—and"—

The lad's emotions overcame him, and he rushed from the room.

In the next apartment he snatched a rifle from the hook and went forth into the sunlight, an awful whiteness on his face.

"Yes, I could kill him for robbing my mother. He is rich and has no right to covet our little home. Mother, I will save you if I die for it?" and the revengeful boy hurried in pursuit of the cattle king.

In the meantime the object of so much bitter feeling made his way along a wagon road that led through a ravine toward his own home, a mile distant.

The cattle king had long coveted the rich quarter section on which the elder Rawson had squatted, and soon after the settler's death Gudgeon began plotting to secure the land. By the aid of a conscienceless lawyer the rich man discovered a flaw in the Rawson papers, and in a little while had secured a title to the land.

Gudgeon was chuckling to himself over the situation when he was brought to a sudden halt by a peculiar sound.

"It's the panther," exclaimed the cattle king, recoiling as he caught sight of a pair of glittering eyes fixed upon him from above his position in the narrow ravine.

On a jutting rock, almost hidden by a dense growth of vines and bushes, not 10 feet from his position, crouched that terror of the west—a mountain panther.

One growl from the ferocious beast was enough to halt the land king.

He realized that he had gone too far to retreat.

Truly death started him in the face.

The animal was crouched ready for a spring. Gudgeon had no weapon, for which he cursed himself at this moment.

For one terrible second Silas Gudgeon watched the flaming eyes and glittering teeth of the forest monster. His face blanched, his knees knocked together, and he felt that he was dying.

Only one brief second!

Then the panther dashed upon his prey!

Even as the animal gathered itself for a spring the whiplike crack of a rifle rang out. The next instant man and beast rolled on the ground.

The panther rolled from his intended victim in dying agonies.

A bullet had pierced its heart.

A boy, bearing a smoking rifle in his hand ran swiftly down the ravine and gave the panther a second shot, which quieted its struggles.

Then the boy turned to Mr. Gudgeon, who still lay upon the ground, insensible and bleeding.

Going to a spring near at hand the lad, using his hat for a basin, brought water and dashed it into the insensible man's face. This had the desired effect, and Mr. Gudgeon, who had fainted from fright, was able to stand on his feet once more.

"The panther!" gasped the cattle king, gazing shudderingly above him.

"There he is," said the lad, pointing to the dead animal.

"Dead?"

"Dead as he can be, sir," answered Caleb Rawson.

Noticing the gun in the hand of the boy, Mr. Gudgeon understood how his life had been saved. Putting out his hand he said:

"You saved my life, Caleb Rawson. I thank you. I'll give $10 for the panther's hide if you will bring it to me at the ranch."

And then the great cattle king strode away.

Tears of indignation and anger filled and blinded the eyes of the young homesteader.

"As mean as ever!" exclaimed Caleb.

"If I'd only left my rifle at home, or hadn't fired that instant, our home would have been saved. Skin the panther and sell him the hide! I wish I'd never followed after the old skinflint to-day."

Then the boy turned on his heel and rushed up the ravine toward home.

Two days passed, and Caleb and his mother had completed all preparations for departure. Both knew the futility of fighting, the cattle king, so made ready to depart. Ten miles distant was an abandoned claim, which the widow and her son had decided to squat on for the time.

Old Jake Benson had consented to move the household goods without charge, as he was an old friend of the family. With a last sad look at the old home, the widow and her son clambered upon the load, old Jake cracked his whip, and the big wagon rolled away.

The way lay through the ravine where Caleb shot the panther a few days before. The lad tried to look cheerful for his mother's sake, since he knew she suffered more than he over their misfortunes.

After going a mile Jake halted before the door of a handsome dwelling—one that had often attractedthe eye of Caleb on account of its beauty.

The surrounding country was a swelling prairie of great fertility, all of which was a part of the cattle king's possessions.

Why do you stop here?" said Caleb as old Jake leaped to the ground.

"I reckon it's all right" returned the man, with a grin.

At this moment a man came out of the house and stood by the wagon.

It was Silas Gudgeon.

"Hey, Caleb, did you bring the panther's skin?" cried Gudgeon in a pleasant voice.

"No, I didn't," returned the lad resentfully.

"Mrs. Rawson, I wish you'd read what's here before you'n Caleb go any farther."

With these words Gudgeon placed a folded paper in the widow's hand. Then he walked hurriedly away.

When Mrs. Rawson opened the paper and read it, she uttered a wondering cry. Caleb looked over her shoulder and soon made out to read through a blinding mist a title deed to 300 acres of the best land in the cattle king's domain, on which stood the house before him.

A note inclosed read:

"Caleb saved an evil man's life. That act opened the wicked man's eyes, and he hopes this deed to Mrs. Rawson will entitle him to forgiveness for the past, if nothing more."—True Flag.

THE ORIGIN OF "SUB ROSA."

The Latin phrase sub rosa is used in elegant speech to indicate secrecy, and means "under the rose" or "not to be told." The origin of the saying is as follows: The first rose that ever was seen was given to Harpocrats, the god of silence, by Cupid to induce the former not to betray Venus in her questionable goings on; and from this myth the ancients made it the symbol of silence, and it was a custom to place a rose above their heads in their banqueting room, in order to indicate that nothing said or done there was to be told outside. A company of wise men once banded themselves together into a club—though they did not call it by that name—whose sole object was mutual improvement For the furtherance of this object, they swore each other to silence during their meetings, the conversation being carried on by means of symbols and pantomine. At length came a man wiser than all the rest asking for admission. They would gladly have received him, but their prescribed number was already filled, to indicate which fact they sorrowfully filled a wineglass to the brim with wine, so that a drop more would make it overflow. He understood, and quick as thought dropped a rose leaf upon the brimming liquid, where it floated without making it run over. The wise men were so delighted at this that they stretched their rules and received him with great joy. And so has come down to us "the rose leaf on the brimming wine cup."

You can talk about the tariff, but there is nothing that will cause a rise in dress goods so quickly as a mouse.—Rochester Democrat.

"I AM NOW A CURED MAN."

The following wonderful statement was sent us by C. E. Carpenter, Druggist, 140 Main St., Spencer, Mass.

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:

GENTS.—Some ten years ago I commenced to fail. INDIGESTION and EXTREME CONSTIPATION caused me to lose flesh very fast. I employed Physicians and tried Sarsaparillas, but continued to grow worse. I had a continuous headache, my skin turned yellow, and my friends thought I must die. My strength left me and courage also. This was my condition last February when I commenced to take

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA

Before the first bottle was gone, there was a great improvement. My friends wanted to know what caused such a change in me. I replied "DANA'S SARSAPARILLA." I am now taking my third bottle and consider myself at the age of 30, after Doctors had failed, a CURED MAN.

Yours respectfully, J. R. HERSEY.

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Best Cure For

All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. It has no equal as a cough cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character that the doctor pronounced it incurable with ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhage, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kan.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I began taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. Williams, Cook City, S. Dak.

Bertha's Proposal.

It was on a summer's evening,
When the west was all aglow
With the crimson-tinted clouds,
Floating slowly to and fro.

And the chirping of the crickets
Broke the silence soft and mellow,
As adown the narrow foot-path
Bertha went to meet her fellow.

'Twas not long before she saw him
Waiting by the old stone wall;
And her heart, although a woman's,
Never quivered once at all.

Though the task was hard before her,
She was bent on "Woman's Right,"
And had secretly determined
To propose that very night.

For she loved her pale-faced Joseph,
And, afraid of losing him,
Made the vow which I have mentioned,
Determined if she could, to win.

Through the red lips came the whisper:
"Joseph, darling, marry me?"
And the horrified expression
On Joseph's face was sad to see.

"Marry you, Miss Johnson? Never!"
And as if shot from a gun,
O'er the wall and through the meadow
Did her pale-faced Joseph run.

After watching him a moment
She sadly turned her face toward home,
And made up her mind, in future
To leave "Woman's Rights" alone.

JOE.

Joe Brown's first year in Deacon Merrill's store had just expired, and now, as he leaned in the doorway, a feeling of pardonable pride swelled in his small bosom. When he entered the Deacon's employ, people shook their heads, predicting that he would not stay a week, but time had proved the fallacy of these dismal prophets.

The store was of the usual type found in small country towns; everything, from a barrel of flour down to a clothespin, and from a linen duster to a dried herring, could be found within its walls. Deacon Merrill also supplied Hillsdale with its drugs, chiefly patent medicines of the sarsaparilla order; and last, but not least, he was postmaster. Oh, a mighty man was the deacon; for was he not, in addition, selectman and town clerk? The store was not large, but every inch was filled: and it was whispered that there were all sorts of things tucked away in nook and crannies, ready to be brought forth at the proper time. Indeed, when the Baptist church was struck by lightning, and the pulpit was rent in twain, what did the deacon do but produce a pulpit of an ancient design from some unexpected corner!

It was small wonder that such a man was held in reverence; and it was considered part of his usual generosity and goodness to take such a boy as Joe Brown into his employ.

And Joe? Well, Joe, to tell the truth, was considered a hard case by Hillsdale at large. He was small for his age, with the reddest head imaginable, and a nose which, unlike that of Miss Fox, seemed determined to turn up at everything. But dear me! no one is to blame for the color of his hair or the shape of his nose, and it was certainly unkind to set poor Joe down as "a miserable little rascal" on that score.

When one forgot the red hair and freckles there was something very winning about the gray eyes and sensitive mouth; but the trouble was, they never were forgotten; and then memory did not stop there, but went back to numerous raids on Farmer Snelling's orchard, to birds' nests that were periodically robbed, and to certain Fourth of July pranks, such as the disappearance of gates, street signs, and door posts. On such points the memory of some people was remarkable. It was also held up as a strange decree of Providence that Steven, Joe's older brother—as good a boy as you can find, and such a help to his mother—should be stricken with a nervous illness, and nearly lose his eyesight, while little Joe seemed to flourish like a green bay tree.

But there was one who believed absolutely in Joe, and that person was his mother. There was a place in her heart for him that not even handsome Steven, nor pretty Annie, nor baby May could fill; a fact that caused Aunt Sally Baker—she was "aunt" to the whole community—to say, between her pinches of snuff, that Anna Hilton always was a queer one, and if it wasn't so, why in the world had she ever married Joseph Brown—and little Joe was growing up to be his exact image.

When Widow Brown first proposed to Deacon Merrill that her youngest son assist in the store, a more astonished old gentleman was never seen. What! Hillsdale traffic descend upon Joe Brown, a youngster of twelve! Impossible.

And so the matter ended for a time. But whether, on mature reflection, the deacon decided that, after all, Hillsdale traffic was not what it used to be, or whether he confessed that he was getting a little old and forgetful—remembering that Aunt Sally had twice received pepper instead of her cherished snuff—or whether he concluded that a partial rest from active labor might be beneficial, I am unable to say; but at any rate, it came about, and one morning, Joe—his red hair shining like a small sun from numerous brushings, his face wreathed in smiles—took his place behind the counter.

All this was a year ago. Even the most crochety were obliged to confess that he had conducted himself well, extremely well; but then a year under Deacon Merrill's influence might change the heart of a far greater sinner.

They acknowledged that it was a great convenience to have the mail sorted with such promptness, and all the orders taken so quickly and carried out so faithfully. Yes, the deacon was a leetle forgetful.

The year was over and Joe was alone, his employer having driven to a neighboring town. It was noon, and the July sun poured down unmercifully on the yellow roof above. Three flies were crawling up and down the counter, in hope of finding a stray drop of molasses or a few grains of sugar.

Joe held in his hand the change from the last transaction of the morning; but he was not thinking of the money, nor of the two ladies who had just left. They were summer boarders from Farmer Snelling's, and had explored the little shop with much the same curiosity they would have shown in a small museum.

But if Hillsdale was interesting to summer boarders, the summer boarders were equally interesting to Hillsdale. Their manners, clothes and speech were duly studied and commented upon, and furnished material for many a gossip. People who never went to church in the fall and winter appeared systematically in the summer. Children found a ready market for wild flowers and fresh berries, while the mothers added to their savings by taking in washing.

But Joe was thinking of something more serious at the moment. That morning Deacon Merrill had had a long talk with him, asking him to stay another year in the store, while he had said many things that made his heart swell with pride. But just now his heart was heavy. Stephen's eyesight was in a very critical condition, and Joe, with all the wisdom of thirteen, decided that the case was beyond the skill of old Dr. Payson. There was another trouble, too, and that was the mortgage on the little gray house. It was all paid but one hundred dollars, but it seemed to Joe that it might just as well be a thousand for that matter. Still, the great anxiety at present, and the one he knew was killing his gentle mother, was the fact that handsome Stephen would be blind. If his brother could only go to Boston and see some doctor there! thought Joe; but how could that be without money? They had barely enough for their needs, and the two dollars he earned each week from the deacon went for food and provisions. Before his eyesight failed him, Stephen had been very helpful, but now, poor lad, he could only sit in a darkened room, with what patience he possessed, waiting for the time when, with renewed vision, he could go out into the world and make a fortune. Stephen was ambitious. Deacon Merrill's store had no attractions for him. As Joe leaned on the counter, he thought the matter over and over. If there was only some way that he could earn money outside of store hours! Five dollars would buy a ticket to Boston and back, and there must be places where one could be treated free of charge. If he could earn five, perhaps the Deacon would pay him a few weeks' wages in advance, and, putting the two together, the journey might be brought about.

The town clock striking twelve brought Joe back to the present, and finding the change still in his hand he turned to the till, counting out the different pieces—fifty-cent, ten, twenty-five and one-cent.

"What a bright penny!" he exclaimed, looking down at it. "I must take it home to May for her little bank."

Putting his hand to his pocket he drew out a dingy copper and dropped it into the till in place of the bright cent. Then he took up the coin to look at it more closely; he had barely glanced at it before. He gave a little cry, and dropped it as if its brightness burned him, while the room seemed to swim before his eyes.

It was no penny, but a five-dollar gold piece, as bright and fresh as if just from the mint.

"Five dollars!" The words rang in his ears. With it Stephen could go to the city.

Joe sat down and went over the details of the morning. Yes, he remembered perfectly how it happened. The ladies had made their various purchases, having just the right change for everything. Before going, Mrs. Trevellyan, the older one, had turned back for some stamps, putting down twenty-six cents—twenty-six cents, as she supposed, but in reality twenty-five cents and a five-dollar gold piece. Perhaps by this time she had discovered her mistake, and was on her way back. Joe scanned the dusty street, but not a person was in sight And if she never discovered it, he mused, why, it was her own fault, and—Joe drew himself up to his full height—it was not much.

"Joe Brown," he said contemptuously, "you would not be so mean." "But wait," said another voice, "she is rich, she will never miss it, and if she does she will never think of you. She will imagine she has lost it, or that one of her servants—"

Poor Joe leaned his head on his hand. Yes, Mrs. Trevellyan was very rich. He had often heard his sister Annie repeat Mary Snelling's words about her wealth and charity. She did not often come to the store, being somewhat of an invalid; but her pretty niece, Miss Kate Trevellyan, often came. Joe stood rather in awe of this young lady who appeared so regularly for the mail, evidently confident of one thick letter, which he noticed never failed. She was so dainty and pretty that she seemed like a creature from another world to the boy. But Mrs. Trevellyan, with her long black veil, impressed him very differently. She was in mourning for her little son, and there was something about her sad, sweet face that went straight to Joe's heart. She had always been so kind to him, too, and had gone out of her way many times to speak to him and ask him about his family. This sorely puzzled Joe, for strangers seldom paid any attention to him. "Perhaps her little boy was about my size," he had once suggested to his mother.

If Joe could have overheard a fragment of Mrs. Trevellyan's conversation as she walked back to the farmhouse, he might have understood.

"He is very like him," she was saying. "The same gray eyes and funny little mouth. Surely, Kate, you must see it?"

"To tell the truth, dear aunt," replied the young lady, "I do not see it; but then, you must remember, I only knew Harry as a little child. This boy seems so well, and oh, Aunt Elanor, he is freckled and his hair is so red!" and pretty Kate raised her eyebrows.

The elder lady seemed scarcely to hear. Her eyes had a far-away look.

"I must see more of him," she said; "I must know all about him. He is so young to be in that dingy little shop. I hope that pompous old man is kind to him."

Meanwhile Joe sat with his head buried in his hands. No; the only thing to do was to see Mrs. Trevellyan as soon as he could be spared from his duties. "But Stephen?" whispered the voice.

At this point Deacon Merrill appeared in the doorway. His Panama hat was tilted on the back of his head. In his hand he held a huge bandanna.

"Well, Joe," he cried, "how's business? Whew! but it's warm! Who's been here? And where's my duster?"

The Deacon delivered his questions in a breath, as was his wont. Joe began at the end, telling him that the duster was hanging on the third nail behind the door; that Letty Parsons had ordered a barrel of flour, and Aunt Sally had sent for some more of "that medicine"; that Mrs. Trevellyan and her niece had made several small purchases—among other things, thirteen stamps.

"Joe, lad, you look pale. The heat, I suppose. Well, it's hotter over in Derry than it is here, and that's a fact. Derry's such a sandy place, I don't see how the folks there stand it," and so the good Deacon rambled on, quite unconscious that his small clerk was suffering agonies.

Some people said the Deacon was selfish. Deacon Barker, of the Baptist church, for instance, and many other worthies—also Baptists,—could not tolerate him. To them he seemed always to be saying, "I, Jeremiah Merrill, deacon of the First church, selectman, town clerk and postmaster, say so, and that settles it."

As Joe made no response in regard to the temperature of Derry, the Deacon changed the subject.

"Yes," he continued, "you look beat out. Go home and get your dinner; nothing like a dinner for cheering one up. Change is all in the till, I suppose. Pretty good for one morning. Humph! rusty-looking one cent. Some of Letty Parson's money, I reckon—just about as bright as she is."

Joe did not wait to hear more, but picked up his battered hat and left the store.

All the afternoon he was confined at his post, so his going to the farmhouse was out of the question; but his mind was fully made up. One look into his mother's face had settled the point forever. As soon as he could be spared he would see Mrs. Trevellyan and tell her all about it. It made him feel hot and ashamed to think how nearly he had yielded to the temptation of the morning. It was wonderful how much better he felt now that the matter was decided. He even ventured to whistle in a subdued tone.

As Joe was leaving the store at six, the Deacon called to him from the porch of his house. It was a rambling white structure, and one of the most imposing in the town.

"Joe, I want you all this evening." The boy's face fell. "There's a very important meeting at Deacon Goodenough's in regard to the new minister, and I can't spare a moment. Why, what's the matter? You look as upset as anything. Dear me! I hope you're not going to be sick! Must have a well boy, you know. Now, there is Johnny Adams."

This Johnny Adams was always brought forth by the Deacon when things did not go quite smoothly.

Joe found his voice. "I am not sick at all, Deacon Merrill," he said respectfully, "but I had an errand at Farmer Snelling's. It was very important," with marked emphasis on the important, "but of course, if you need me —"

"Washing, I suppose," interrupted the other.

Joe replied with considerable dignity that it was not washing.

The Deacon leaned forward and regarded his small employe with curiosity. He had heard Mrs. Trevellyan's questions in regard to the boy, and a feeling of uneasiness shot through him.

"Look here, Joe," he said, not unkindly, "you must not let those city folks turn that head of yours; you know I need you. You're a good boy—a good boy."

"How about Johnny Adams?" Joe wanted to say, but he felt that the Deacon was not in a mood for pleasantries.

"And, Joe, if your errand is really important, you can have an hour to-morrow morning; say, between 9 and 10. Now go, and be back at seven, sharp."

Joe walked slowly home. It seemed to him as if the little gold piece weighed him down. All night he dreamed about it. At times it grew as big as the sun, and again it shrank into nothing. Once he thought he stood before Mrs. Trevellyan, ready to tell her all about it, and lo! it had turned into the dingy copper. Then it seemed to be alive. It was always just out of his reach; he could almost grasp it, but never hold it. The first thing he did on awaking was to examine his little gray coat, to see if the coin was really there, or whether, like a penny in the fairy tale, it had been spirited away.

All he morning he waited feverishly for nine o'clock, and when the time came, he fairly flew over the ground. He had composed a little speech with great care, which, he flattered himself, explained the whole thing in a nutshell.

"Aunt Elanor," said Miss Kate, appearing at Mrs. Trevellyan's door, "that small boy, Joe Brown, is down stairs. He wants to see you. I asked him his message, but he must see you. I think he has been running, for he is all out of breath."

"Poor little fellow! what can it be? I am very glad that he has come, however. Please send him up at once."

"Oh, by the way, aunt, have you found your gold piece?"

"No. Isn't it odd? I have looked high and low, although I am sure I put it in my purse. I do not mind the loss of the money so much, but one dislikes to have anything disappear so unaccountably. Now, please, tell Joe to come up."

In a moment Joe stood on the threshold.

Mrs. Trevellyan rose. "Come in," she said eagerly. Joe looked down at his dusty boots, and up at the yellow, warped ceiling, but the little speech failed to come.

"What is it, dear?" she asked kindly, putting out her arms and drawing him toward her. She could not resist the gray eyes. "My dear little boy," she said, under her breath.

Joe was so overcome at this reception that he could only draw out the little coin and hold it before her astonished eyes.

Then he found his voice. He never knew how it happned, but, before he realized it, he had told Mrs. Trevellyan all about Stephen, his mother and sister, and his life in the store. When he left, an hour later, I doubt if there was a happier boy in all the broad land, for Mrs. Trevellyan had promised to take Stephen back with her when she returned to the city at the end of the month; and that was not all; she had also told him that pretty Miss Kate was going to marry one of Boston's famous oculists, and that Stephen's eyes should receive the very best attention.

During the next three weeks Joe and Mrs. Trevellyan became great friends.

Every day he walked up to the farm, or she drove down to the little gray house. Mrs. Brown she liked at once, and soon knew them all, from Stephen down to little May. But Joe was her favorite, and no one knew, save Kate, of a cherished plan, a plan nipped in the bud when she saw how much his mother was wrapped up in him. With her the boy forgot his shyness and would tell her of his favorite books, his hopes and fears, and his dreams for the future.

At the end of the month, when Mrs. Trevellyan and Kate were reluctantly leaving, Joe stood on the narrow platform of the little station to see them off. Stephen, surrounded with all the luxury of a traveling invalid, looked very happy. Miss Kate, prettier than ever, had taken him under her protection, for she seemed to feel a certain responsibility in the matter. Mrs. Trevellyan had eyes only for Joe. "Good-by, good-by," she was saying, over and over again. "Don't let your mother worry a moment about Stephen, for I shall keep him until he is perfectly well; and don't work too hard in the store: and, remember, we shall be back next year for the whole summer. There's the whistle! Don't look quite yet! Good-by!" And with a puff, a roar, a shriek, the train moved out of the depot.

Joe waited until it was out of sight before he opened his hand. In it was a little green silk purse, something bright and glittering showing through the meshes. He turned from the depot with its group of idlers, and walked up the road until it was quite out of sight. Then he sat down on the grassy bank and opened it with trembling fingers. Out rolled coin after coin of yellow gold; his head seemed to swim. Twenty five-dollar gold pieces—one hundred dollars. There they lay on the grass, a bright glistening pile.

Wait! There was something white—a note. Joe unfolded a little wad of paper and out rolled another coin. He closed his eyes for a moment, feeling as if the days of fairies had indeed returned. Then he picked up the note and read:—

DEAR JOE. In this little purse you will find one hundred dollars. I trust it will not come amiss.

Joe dropped the paper and gazed over the green fields. "She knows everything," he said. "How could she have ever guessed about the mortgage?" Then he read on:—

The last gold piece is yours. Belongs to you by right—you understand why. Buy whatever you like with it, only please spend it all for yourself. I must not write another word, or I shall crowd out the gold, and that will never do. Good-by, dear Joe.

Your true friend,
ELEANOR TREVALLYAN.

That evening Joe sat at his mother's feet, going over the events of the day and of the last month, which had been the happiest of his life.

WOMAN'S CORNER.

THE HULL HOUSE SETTLEMENT.

Miss Jane Addams, one of the residents of the Hull House Setlement, West Halsted street, Chicago, has recently spent a few weeks at the East. While here she addressed the Settlement Association at Wellesley College. The information given in this paper concerning that work was derived from that address and from private conversation with Miss Addams.

The work of the Hull House Settlement is not what is known as "slum work," neither is it what is called "missionary work." "Slum work" is among the lowest classes, especially the chronically criminal classes. "Missionary work" is distinctly religious work among whatever class. The college settlements residents are Christian women. They live Christianity. Each resident attends the church of her choice, and whatever of religious work she does is done through that church just as she would work anywhere, but the settlement's work is social rather than distinctly religious.

The work of the Hull House is among the poor; what might be called the respectable poor. Most of the people within this influence are English speaking, Americans, English or Irish; there are also foreigners, principally Italians, Germans, Russians, Russian Jews and French, many of whom cannot speak or understand our language. Some one of the residents understands and speaks some one of these languages, so that little embarrassment is felt on this account. The Russians and Germans are often well educated, some of them having had the advantages of university culture. Many have been rich and in one way or another have become poor and have drifted to this country in the hope of bettering their fortunes. Among the French are many accomplished women. Many are poor for no intellectual lack except the inability to make money, that lack often indicating a higher power in other directions.

A great many working girls who have no city homes also come under this influence, and are helped by the Hull House workers. For instance, a cooperative boarding house has now been in operation a year. It accommodates some 40 or more girls, who were formerly boarding in cheap boarding houses. The Hull House people engaged the house, had it furnished and started the boarding house. There is a cook and several servants. The girls pay three dollars a week. This covers all expenses, including house rent; it is said "house and furniture rent," but in reality the furniture was donated by a few friends. This I suppose the girls do not know. Any extra expense, as extra coal during the severe weather, is provided for by assessments. This seldom occurs. The girls regulate their own arrangements with the advice of the Hull House helpers; they also do some of the housework, not much, of course, as they are at work all day. These girls earn from four to nine dollars a week, the average amount being about six dollars. There are cloakmakers, shirt-makers, bookbinders, shoe stitchers, and a few typewriter operators. Their rooms and food are much better than they had at the cheap boarding houses, the expense of board is less, and they have the advantages of home.

Among the first enterprises of the Hull House Settlement were a kindergarten and a day nursery. Mothers who work away from home all day bring or send their little ones here to be taken care of. The children are of all ages, from babies of a few weeks to children four and five years old, the older of whom spend several hours in the kindergarten each day. In most cases the mothers pay a certain sum for the care of the children.

The work is carried on principally by visiting and by clubs and classes. The men enjoy mathematics, natural sciences, like chemistry, and political and economic studies. There are men of all possible political views, Anarchists (since the riot the Anarchists are mild philosophers) Socialists, Nihilists, etc., etc. These men are brought into the same clubs and the ideas of one seem to modify the ideas of another, while they all study political science and the principles of the United States government. There are classes in history, literature, music, drawing, a few classes in languages, and indeed in every department of academic work.

Free lectures are given by professionals in the city, and members of clubs who are competent become teachers for their associates. In every case dues are paid, the Hull House residents acting as agents to bring the people together, to organize the work, and to advise. The outlook now, after three successful years, is for a systematic college extension work, a Hull House College of evening classes among working people. This intellectual stimulus is looked upon, however, as a means rather than an end; a means to pleasanter homes, purer and happier living.

Receptions are held at the Hull House which bring together socially those who will be congenial and helpful to each other, and thus courtesy, good manners and delightful social intercourse enter the lives of those whom work, care and misfortune have made hard, rude and unhappy.

In all this work, you understand, the settlement workers act only as originators, leaders and guides. Each man and each woman has his and her say, does his and her work, and pays his and her share in the support of the enterprise he or she is interested in.

One interesting fact I must not forget to tell you about. The ward inspectors were negligent of their duties; the garbage was not carried away as it should have been, nor the streets properly cleansed. The Hull House residents circulated several thousand printed circulars asking for reports concerning the sanitary conditions of the ward. These question slips were many of them returned with answers. The Hull House people then investigated the cases of neglect and appealed to the alderman or whoever had authority in the matter, and the result was an improved condition and a new inspector. In relating this incident somewhat more in detail than I have told it, Miss Addams facetiously remarked, "We take no pride in this, however, for the new inspector is hardly more efficient than the old one was, but this year we shall have our own candidate for alderman, and although we do not expect to elect him, he will be a decent man and we shall make our influence felt, and eventually we do expect to have an alderman of our own choosing."

The help of the Hull House residents in time of strikes is much appreciated. Their advice is "do not strike." "Yet sometimes," said Miss Addams, "terrible as a strike is, it is the only hope for justice. In several cases we have been able to be of use and have helped the strikers to obtain their demands. In others not." And she described several strikes, their causes and results. In every case the Hull House

Three Months for 25 Cents.

To any one who is not now a subscriber to this paper, it will be sent three months on trial on receipt of 25 cents.

EX-PRESIDENT HARRISON has been offered the presidency of the State University at Bloomington, Ind.

BOSTON was visited by another big fire Sunday morning, when Tremont Temple was destroyed, for the third time in its history.

THE citizens of Pittsfield tendered ex-Senator H. L. Dawes and wife a hearty reception Monday evening on their return from Washington, the assembly numbering 2000.

A NEW trial has been denied Carlyle G. Harris, the New York medical student who poisoned his young wife, and he will be killed by electricity unless pardoned by the governor.

THERE can be little doubt as to the fate of the White Star steamer Naronic, which sailed from Liverpool February 11th for New York and which was not heard from until Monday, when a British steamer arriving at Bremen reported having passed two of the Naronic's lifeboats at sea March 4th southwest of Sable Island, off the coast of Newfoundland. Both boats were empty, but one bore evidences of recent occupancy, and it may be possible that the people in her have been picked up by a passing vessel. A steamer passing Deal Monday signalled that she had on board 11 shipwrecked people, and it is hoped they may have been some of the passengers of the ill-fated vessel, which doubtless lies at the bottom of the ocean.

LAST Friday Marion A. Montgomery, who tried to kill his wife and two children at Pelham in 1882, only succeeding the ending the life of one child, for which he was serving a life sentence, was pardoned by Governor Russell. Charles A. Briggs, another Pelham murderer, was pardoned Thanksgiving day, 1891, and the Springfield Republican sarcastically reminds the governor that there is one more from that vicinity who is still in prison. Dunlap, the Northampton bank robber, was also pardoned a short time ago. At this rate Western Massachusetts criminals need not look with much of a shudder upon a life sentence. This end of the state would have been just as well served to have allowed all of these men to serve out their sentences. These frequent pardons of life convicts can have no other effect than to lessen the fear of punishment in others, and render greater the liability of crime.

WITH the withdrawal of Mr. Haile from consideration as a candidate for gubernatorial honors next fall it is not likely that Western Massachusetts will lack a candidate for the place. It has long been supposed that William Whiting of Holyoke would like the nomination when the right time came, which many of his friends evidently think is the present, for he tells a reporter of the Boston Globe that he is receiving quite a number of messages of assurance of support from prominent Republicans who advise him to be a candidate. He is, however, unwilling to enter a contest unless assured of united support in all quarters, and would not stand in the way of any man whom the people of the commonwealth might think a stronger candidate. So Mr. Whiting may be considered fairly in the field for the nomination. The other name most at the front is that of Attorney General Pillsbury of Boston.

THE persistent agitation for better roads throughout the state is being felt in many ways, and it can be only a question of time when the state will be compelled to take hold of the matter and aid in the bettering of the highways. To many of the towns the permanent improvement of their highways or any material portion of them would be a severe drain on the taxpayers, and in their interests Mayor Elihu Hayes of Lynn proposes to present to the Legislative committee on roads and bridges a bill substantially like the following:—

AN ACT TO IMPROVE THE HIGHWAYS OF THE COMMONWEALTH AND TO AID TOWNS IN THE CONSTRUCTION AND MAINTENANCE OF BETTER ROADS.

Upon the application of the county commissioners of any county to the governor and council, there shall be furnished, at the expense of the commonwealth, one or more steam rollers, portable stone crushers and such other road machines as the governor and council may deem necessary and best adapted to the making of good roads in the respective localities.

Such machines shall remain the property of the commonwealth and be managed and maintained under the direction of the county commissioners.

The county commissioners shall engage competent engineers and skilled mechanics to operate said machines, who shall be paid from the county treasury such sums for each day's actual service as the county commissioners may determine. Also one half the expense so incurred shall be repaid to the county by the commonwealth.

The treasurer shall pay from the treasury of the commonwealth such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

It will be seen that under such a law the direct expense to the small towns would be very small, while the cities of the county would contribute largely toward the half of the expense which the county would pay. A law of this kind would do much to increase property values among the farmers and in the small towns, to say nothing of the comfort the better roads would give to travelers and teamsters.

A NEW phase of the railroad strike question, and one the outcome of which will be watched with interest all over the country, both by railroad managers and employes, has come up at Toledo, Ohio. A strike for higher wages has been in progress among the engineers on the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Michigan road, and the engineers of other roads have refused to haul cars to or from that road. The road applied to the courts, and last Friday Judge Taft of the United States circuit court at Detroit granted an order enjoining Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Engineers from issuing or continuing in force any rule or order requiring engineers to boycott Ann Arbor freight, whereupon he ordered a suspension of the rule. On Friday night five engineers and three firemen on the Lake Shore road left the employ of the company because they were expected to take out trains containing Arbor cars, whereupon Judge Ricks of the United States district court at Cleveland went to Toledo on Saturday, wanting to know why the men should not be held for contempt in refusing to obey the order of the court. In the opinion which he delivered he held that the employes had no right to leave the employ of the company without due notice; that the company was compelled to perform certain service to the public under penalties for failure, and that under those circumstances the road was entitled to protection from the acts of its employes. The court did not assume the power to compel the men to remain in the employ of the road if they did not choose to, only that they had no right to leave their trains, etc., without due warning of their intention. Of course the question of the soundness of these decisions will be carried to the United States supreme court, and the finding will be watched for with great interest. It is safe to say that the action of the judges voices the feeling of a vast majority of the thinking people of the country. That a railroad should be compelled to perform its duties as common carrier under severe penalties for non-performance and then be placed at the mercy of its employes, who, under no fear of punishment, may conspire to interrupt the business of the road and the convenience of the traveling public, is certainly not equal justice for all. Should the opinions already given be upheld it will be the deathblow for strikes, which will be gladly welcomed by the whole country.

TOWN MEETING.

The Officers Elected—The Vote in Detail.

Monday was as fine a day as could be wished for the annual meeting of the town, and as a result a large vote was polled, 797, including the vote of five women for school committee. The strong fight which the anti-Twiss men of the Democratic party made did not avail much, for their candidate was 139 votes behind Mr. Twiss, who however may thank the Republicans for his election, the ballots showing that many of them voted for him for the third man, evidently satisfied with his past record in the management of town affairs. It was a close call for him, however, as he was only four votes ahead of Capt. Clark. The vote for the first four on the ticket will be seen to be very close, there being only 26 difference between the highest and the lowest. H. T. Bishop and C. F. Smith are reelected assessors, the new member being John O. Hamilton, which leaves the village of Palmer without a member of the board, a circumstance which has not occurred before for many years. William Merriam is retained as overseer of the poor, and Messrs. Breckenridge and Deming as members of the school committee, as well as J. B. Shaw for town clerk and treasurer. W. A. Weld will collect the taxes the coming year, as last. Three Rivers gets two members of the board of health. The town goes for license again by a majority of 101. The vote in detail is as follows, a star (*) indicating election:

The association proposes to become incorporated, which will enable it to receive bequests, and own real and personal property. Editor of the Journal: — In last week's JOURNAL appears the following: "The priest, however, declined to tie the knot for less than $15, which was more, etc., etc." I feel certain that you did not attempt to verify this item. For your benefit permit me to call your attention to a fact of which every Catholic, and every intelligent Protestant who knows anything about Catholic doctrine, is well aware—that in the Roman Catholic church the administration of the sacraments does not depend upon monetary considerations. Respectfully yours,

WM. H. HART, Rector St. Thomas' church.

[In the item referred to the JOURNAL did not intend to be understood as vouching for the truth of the story. The statement was made, however, by the party interested when on trial in the district court.—ED.]

L. E. Moore has resigned his position as treasurer of the Palmer Savings Bank, to take effect April 1st. Mr. Moore's probable removal to Worcester in the near future was announced a couple of weeks ago, and as he desires an extended vacation trip in the West soon he resigns now from the position he has filled for the past 11 years with signal ability. A special meeting of the savings bank trustees will be held next Monday to act upon the resignation, and the question of a successor will naturally come up at the same time. There are reported to be a number of local aspirants for the place, among them D. F. Holden, the real estate and insurance agent, A. L. Hills, who has been ticket agent at the passenger station for some years and who last year was a member of the board of assessors, S. H. Hellyar, the Main street merchant, and S. W. French, a former resident of this place and well known here. There are also several other residents who would doubtless like the place, but it is not unlikely that an outside man, one with some practical bank knowledge, will be selected.

The three-act drama, "Placer Gold," under the direction of W. A. Weld, will be brought out at the opera house Tuesday evening, April 4th. It is an exciting play, abounding in striking episodes, as well as pleasing scenes. It has no objectionable features to offend the most fastidious taste, but from first to last is well sustained. The local cast is a strong one, and the play is bound to prove a great success. The net proceeds will be devoted toward defraying the expense of putting cases into the library rooms for holding Dr. Stowe's collection of historical documents and antiquities, and as the object is entirely for the benefit of the public it is hoped and expected that the house will be filled. Reserved seat tickets will go on sale at O. P. Allen's drug store next Friday morning at 35 cents. The cast is:—

Nathan Bardwell, a farmer,.....Mr. W. A. Weld

State Primary School Notes.

F. A. Ruggles of Boston was a visitor at the school Wednesday.

The inmates were given a party on the evening of St. Patrick's Day in the girls' recreation room.

Last evening Superintendent and Mrs. Wheeler gave a party complimentary to the teachers. As Miss G. A. Cheney retires this week after five years of very successful teaching, the party was in the nature of a farewell to her. Supper was served from 5 until 6.30.

Last Friday was Mrs. E. G. Ward's birthday, and in the evening Miss Price and Miss Rogers gave a supper in honor of that event. Just as the last course had been served the party was interrupted by a merry and tuneful (?) serenade beneath the windows. Of course the intruders were at once invited inside, where they partook of the good things provided. Speeches were made and congratulations offered, after which the party retired and the customary quiet prevailed.

Miss Cheney, who has been a teacher here for several years, has resigned her position and to-morrow will go to her home in West Dudley. Last evening a number of her friends called upon her and made the following presentation:

To Miss G. A. Cheney:

Once more we have the pleasure of meeting you in a social gathering. It was with deep feelings of regret that we learned that you had tendered your resignation as a teacher of this school. For some time it has been our privilege to enjoy your society, and we deeply feel the loss of so true a friend and one whose every aim was for the welfare of the school and those laboring with you. It has always been inspiring to us to notice the earnestness manifested in the discharge of your duties; and although there have been many difficulties to surmount and discouragements to overcome, still the good results that have always attended your labors should be a pleasant reflection in years to come. In taking your departure from us we wish you to feel that our earnest desires are that your pathway in life may always be pleasant, and we now present to you this book of Adelaide Proctor's Poems, and wish you to accept it, not for its intrinsic value, but as tangible evidence of our esteem and best wishes for your future welfare.

THORNDIKE.

Dentist M. W. Flynn of Pittsfield was in town Monday.

Granger Clark is home from college for a short vacation.

The drum corps has been a little handicapped by the removal of Mr. Chapman, the instructor, to Warren.

There are many cases of measles in this village among the children, there being as many as seven cases in one family, while two or three are not uncommon.

Edward Hale is to build a new hall on Commercial street near his residence, to be 30 by 22 feet, and have an eight-foot ceiling, and to be finished in the latest style. It is said that when completed it will be occupied by the Foresters.

The Columbia Club Minstrels have their tickets on sale by members of the club and at A. P. Adams's and J. F. Luman's drug stores. Those who wish to secure fair seats should buy now, as there are only a few good seats left. The club will play at Belchertown April 6th.

BONDSVILLE.

Howard Clark of Warren spent Tuesday with his mother, Mrs. H. D. Shaw.

The sale of pews in the Methodist church will be held next Monday evening at 7.30.

Miss Cora Carver of Northampton was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Shaw over Sunday.

Mrs. J. B. Belcher of Chicopee is spending a few weeks with her sister, Mrs. F. H. Carroll.

The Methodists of Ware, Warren and Enfield held a Sabbath school convention here to-day.

Mrs. Charles Walker and children of West Warren were the guests of her sister, Mrs. O. A. Parent, last week.

Mrs. Jennie Warren, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. H. M. Auger, has returned to her home in Brattleboro, Vt.

Dr. H. M. Auger reports 21 births from March 1, 1892 to March 1, 1893, which for some reason were omitted from the report.

Fred Lamb has left his position as slasher tender for the Boston Duck Co., and has gone to Norwich, Ct., to work at the same business there.

Mrs. F. H. Carroll, who has been quite sick the last two weeks with heart trouble, is somewhat better. She was attended by Dr. Stowe of Palmer.

The last entertainment in the course was given Wednesday evening, consisting of readings by Mrs. Richardson of Worcester, and was much enjoyed. Mrs. H. M. Auger and Miss Ora Parent furnished instrumental music.

Miss Bernice O'Regan gave a party to about 25 of her young friends Wednesday, it being her thirteenth birthday. She was the recipient of several handsome gifts, one being a gold watch and chain from her father.

Mary, the little daughter of John Mansfield, who has been sick with diphtheria, died Tuesday morning, and their little boy the only remaining child, died yesterday of the same disease. Much sympathy is expressed for the bereaved parents.

There was a good attendance at the minstrel entertainment given in Liberty Hall last Friday evening by the drum corps. All the parts were well taken, and the audience seemed to greatly enjoy the performance, the principal performers being obliged to respond to encores. The corps will net about $40, and wishes to thank the public for the generous patronage it received.

THREE RIVERS.

H. N. Fish spent Sunday in Lowell.

Nettie Thayer of Thorndike is the guest of Mrs. Lavine.

Miss Della Gage spent Sunday in Springfield among friends.

J. K. Knox has been suffering from erysipelas for several days.

Robins made their appearance here yesterday, and are welcome guests.

Charles Kendrick has taken a position in a meat market in Turners Falls.

C. H. Ruggles has taken a contract to build a tenement house for Franklin Barker.

Miss White of Worcester was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Frank White a few days this week.

A number of people from here attended the Sunday school convention at Bondsville to-day.

F. A. Ruggles opened the angling season successfully last Monday by catching a string of handsome fish.

On Tuesday evening the Three Bivers band congratulated John F. Twiss on his reelection as one of the selectmen of Palmer.

William Franklin, the man who was so seriously injured by the cars last week, is slightly better, according to the last reports.

F. A. Ruggles and J. C. O'Donnel have entered into a partnership for doing carpenter work in all its branches, and have taken several contracts in that line from town parties.

On Monday Master Dannie Carroll met with a severe accident by falling down stairs and breaking his wrist, also receiving other bruises, but he is as comfortable as could be expected under the circumstances.

Tuesday evening the Christian Endeavor society held a social meeting in the Union church. Ice cream, cake and fruit added to the enjoyment of the occasion, and everyone felt that the evening had been pleasantly occupied.

Miss Johnson is having her millinery opening this week at Mrs. Orcutt's old stand, the days announced being Thursday, Friday and Saturday, and is showing a pleasing assortment of trimmed and untrimmed hats and bonnets, with the latest novelties in flowers, laces, etc., besides a line of fancy goods and other articles for feminine use and adornment.

An effort is being made to prevent the granting of a license in this village by circulating a petition paper in order to find what the true sentiment is regarding the liquor question in this place. It is hoped that enough names can be secured to induce the selectmen to withhold license for this year, and thus avoid some of the evils attendant upon an open saloon.

While Mr. and Mrs. Walter Trickett were enjoying a carriage ride last Saturday evening they had rather an unfortunate experience. While driving from Palmer toward home the horse became frightened at the cars, somewhere between the New London and Ware River crossings, and became so unmanageable that he fell and got entangled in the harness, and while Mr. Trickett was jumping from the carriage in order to liberate the animal he wrenched one of his legs so badly that he has been confined to his room since.

R. M. Wheeler has resigned his position as overseer of the belt shop in the mill, and intends to leave here and make his home in the vicinity of Harrisville, Mass., where he will conduct a large farm on shares with his brother. Mr. Wheeler has lived in the town for nearly ten years, during which time he has been highly respected by all who knew him, and it will be with a feeling of sincere regret that the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Wheeler will see them take their departure from here about the first of April.

Last Friday evening Prof. Richardson of Amherst College, assisted by Dr. Harris, also of the college, ably delivered their famous lecture on the "Passion Play" in the Baptist church. Every one of the large audience present was highly entertained, and is satisfied that Dr. Harris's representation of the scenes by stereopticon is the best of the kind that has ever been in the place. The pastor of the church, Mr. McInness, hopes to get Prof. Richardson to give a similar lecture on "Peasant Life in Germany," in about three weeks from now, which would doubtless be equally interesting. Mr. and Mrs. Kendrick entertained the gentlemen while staying here.

LEGISLATIVE MATTERS.

BOSTON, March 22, 1893.

The committees on education and taxation which sat jointly to consider the bill which was defeated last year to distribute the bank and corporation taxes among the towns so as to help the poor towns in the support of their public schools, has reported against the plan. Senator Coughlin of Middlesex and Representatives Raymond, Schult and Forbush dissent.

An end has been made for the year of the plan to change the Australian ballot law so as to permit any party which casts 5000 votes to put its candidates on the official ballot without nomination papers. The move was in the interest of the Prohibitionists, who by their vote for governor falling below three per cent have been obliged to circulate nomination papers in order to get their candidates on the official ballot. The Senate killed the bill by a vote of 17 to 8, on party lines. It was said in the debate that the Prohibitionists had been led themselves, upon the arguments presented at the hearing, to admit that the law is perfectly fair as it is, and that it ought not to be changed. The favor of the Democrats to the Prohibitionists is doubtless due to the fact that it is believed that Russell would not have been elected without Prohibitionist votes.

The efforts to change the Australian ballot law are likely to fail for this year, as the committee on election laws has reported unanimously against allowing the names of one party's candidates to be arranged in a group by themselves, and against allowing a single mark to be made for the entire ticket. Both of these proposed changes were in the way of requiring less intelligence and care on the part of the voter, and it is those very qualities which the Australian ballot is intended to foster.

The Senate has killed the bill to permit fraternal beneficiary organizations to offer inducements to get new members. It seemed to be thought that these orders have such a standing, or lack of it now, that no agent should be allowed commissions for the sake of inducing other persons to join.

An adverse report has been made, as the people will say ought to have been made, on the petition of Representative Garfield of Brockton that the railroads be required to carry all state officials and members of the Legislature free.

The committee on constitutional amendments is divided on party lines, just as it was last year, on the question of biennial elections for state officers and members of the Legislature, Republicans for the change and Democrats against it. By an apparent accident last year the majority of the committee was Democratic, and so the report was adverse. This year the majority is Republican, so the report is for the change and the Democratic minority dissent. As the Republicans have over two-thirds of the House it is possible for them to pass the resolve if they make it a party measure, but a material proportion of the Republicans have always been against the amendment.

What will come of the move to compel all new railroad stock to be sold at public auction is not easy to predict. The newspapers seem to be generally in favor of the bill, and there is a tremendous pressure from the Boston business men in favor of it. They put their arguments on the ground of public benefit, and the question of private rights to the railroad property seems to be wholly ignored. The bill is still before the committee, who wish to see whether it will include street railway stocks.

The plan which the banking committee is considering for a revival of the state bank system proposes to have circulating notes based upon securities to be deposited with the state auditor. The bill specifies what securities shall be deposited, and the circulating notes may be issued against them to 90 per cent of their market value, but not to exceed 90 per cent of their par value. Provision is made for compelling the banks to redeem their notes, and the whole of the securities may be taken for that purpose if necessary. Opposition has already been made to the bill in behalf of the labor organizations of the state, on the ground that the bill would be class legislation.

A unanimous report has been made from the committee on roads and bridges of a bill to compel the use of broad tires for heavy vehicles, whether with two or four wheels, in every part of the state but Suffolk county. All new vehicles or those which are repaired as to their rims and tires must be made under the law, and after three years all such wheels must come under the law. Years ago such a plan was proposed, but was rejected by a majority of the committee and afterward by the House.

It promises to be a brisk contest over the bill for the exemption of municipal bonds from taxation. The committee was against it with only one exception, but the House debated it at length and then set the report aside by a vote of 57 to 74 on rejecting the bill. This gives the bill a standing and it has been assigned to next Tuesday on motion of Mr. Mellen of Worcester, who is strongly opposed to it, and who will doubtless do much in the intervening time for its defeat.

Both branches are agreed upon an investigation of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company, to see if it has not been violating its charter in its attacks upon the New York and New England road and in preventing the running of quick trains between New York and Boston. The railroad committee will make the investigation, and its report must be made to the Legislature by May 1.

It is proposed to appoint a committee of one to mark the position of Massachusetts troops in the campaign of Chattanooga, for the national government has bought land there for a public reservation.

An adverse report has been made, four members of labor committee dissenting, on the 54-hour bill for women and minors in factories and workshops. LANDON.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

The trouble with most cough medicines is that they spoil the appetite, weaken digestion, and create bile. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, on the contrary, while it gives immediate relief, assists rather than impairs the assimilative process.

"What's in a name?" Well, that depends. For instance, the name of "Ayer" is sufficient guarantee that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a genuine, scientific blood-purifier, and not a sham, like so much that goes by the name of "sarsaparilla." Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the standard.

CHILDREN CRY FOR PITCHER'S CASTORIA.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., March, 1893.

Easter is the time when the dull things of winter are changed to the cheery, bright effects of spring. All the new things breathe the Easter-time spirit now.

There's much to see.

The millinery exhibit includes examples (not copies) from some of the best Parisian modistes, the most artistic models ever created in our own work rooms, and the richest of velvets ribbons, laces and flowers.

The new jackets and wraps and capes are in all manner of combinations of materials, colors and trimings fancy run mad. Capes are as multifarious as the hats in coloring and trimming. The majority are of cloth or silk or lace; but the richest are of velvet.

Second floor.

There is too little of the high-class dress fabrics to advertise; but there are many of them. And it is difficult to set them before you in the papers; for the styles run something like this.

Needle-printed poplins with self-colored figures
Shimmering surfaces with wavy iridescent lines
Fish-scale effects that bear in their designs something like the glint of the sun as it flitters across the back of some finny beauty
Illuminated whip cords with brocbe effects
Two toned diagonals with hair line stripes
Satin striped poplins.
Silk and wool velours with bayadere cords
Wool bengalines dotted with silk
Fine serges with jacquard figures
Glace whip cords
Melange suitings of colors rich as the neck of a pigeon
Scotch and English cheviots
Smooth-surfaced poplinettes closely woven
Double diagonals of fine soft wool
Spingelines with pin dots of contrasting color
Soft fabrics with tiny shepherds check
Granite weaves with silky spots

Just now the variety of plain colors in staple fabrics is quite considerable. There is no such stock anywhere within a hundred miles of us. We have

A MAMARONECK MIRACLE.

HOW EDWARD HAVILAND SAVED HIS WIFE'S LIFE.

She Never Knew a Well Day in Seventeen Years—On Crutches Some of the Time—But Can Now Walk as Well as Any One.

MAMARONECK, N.Y.—Mrs. Edward Haviland of this place owes her life to her husband; who during her long and critical illness never gave up the thought that she could and would be cured, although it seemed sometimes like fighting against fate.

By accident Mr Haviland heard of the cures Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy was performing, and brought this medicine home to Mrs. Haviland, who began its use with the most gratifying result. "Although I naturally shrink from having my name appear in public print," said Mrs. Haviland, "I think it is a duty I owe to those who may be suffering, that I make known my remarkable recovery. I was first taken with a severe pain in the chest and stomach. The pain gradually moved downward until it settled in the bottom of my right foot and from that followed suffering which even now I dread to think about. My right foot and leg began to swell, and the foot became drawn up until the hollow of it laid on my left knee. I was confined to my bed, being moved only once in fourteen weeks, after that I walked on crutches for over a year. I had a large sore gather and break on my ankle, and the whole top of my foot was completely raw.

During all this time I tried many different medicines and several doctors, but received no lasting benefit. One day my husband brought me a bottle of Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. I began its use with but little faith, but before I had taken half the bottle, I was greatly relieved. The disease in my feet was not my only trouble; I also suffered from dropsy. I was so bloated that I could hardly move, I had not seen a well day in seventeen years, until my husband brought me this great medicine. I have taken five bottles of Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, and I feel like a different woman, my dropsy is all gone, and I can walk almost as well as ever, and to a woman who has not walked, only limped about for so many years, the use of my feet alone is like a new lease of life."

There are many others here who have been cured of disease by Favorite Remedy. In talking with a local physician, he said, "I use Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy now for all diseases that arise from excess of uric acid in the blood, and have cured some of the most stubborn cases of rheumatism, dyspepsia, kidney, liver and urinary trouble, although these diseases appear to be widely different, they all originate from the one source, this deadly 'uric acid.' Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy dissolves this acid, dispelling it from the system through the natural channels, thus curing disease. I believe every rheumatic or dyspeptic victim should use it."

Another Aged Person

Tests the healing waters of Leon's famous fountain and is cured. He says he considers Leon's Sarsaparilla the Greatest Remedy on Earth.

The Kind that Never Fails

Inflammation of the Bladder and Enlargement of Prostate Gland permanently cured.

We are in receipt of the following letter from Mr. H. N. Woodcock, a well-known and prominent citizen of Waldo County, Me.

Gentlemen:—For the benefit of suffering humanity I deem it my duty to say that for many years I have been troubled with Inflammation of the Neck of the Bladder and Enlargement of the Prostate Gland, occasioning frequent passing of water, and obliging me to be up frequently nights. My diseases, with broken rest and age, seemed to be working together to drive me to my death. I tried our most prominent local physicians and many different medicines, but without any benefit whatever. Three bottles of Leon's Sarsaparilla completely cured me, and I am now, at the age of 76 years, well and hearty. I consider Leon's Sarsaparilla the greatest remedy on earth.

A Haunting Memory.

It is like I think of the old oaken bucket,
The old oaken bucket which hung in the well,
Though on tiptoe I've stood and endeavored to suck it,
And could of its moss and its pollywogs tell;
For my own recollection and object persistent
More often encounters with sentiment dire,
And object with dire life as truly consistent—
The old oaken woodbox that stood by the fire—
The old oaken woodbox, the never-full woodbox,
The terrible woodbox that stood by the fire.

What visions of long, weary days in the winter,
When the boy chopped away the old woodbox to fill;
Now rubbing his hands, now extracting a splinter,
And envying other boys sliding down hill
Or at the creek skating and tempting him, rather,
Though seldom he dared to fulfill his desire,
For an earnest and muscular man was his father,
And the woodbox was waiting for wood by the fire—
The wide open woodbox, the ravenous woodbox,
The yawning old woodbox that stood by the fire.

What visions of summer days—schoolboys in swimming—
While he in the woodyard was chopping away,
Tears of rage and annoyance his eyesight half dimming,
For he didn't like work and he did like to play;
But the farm hands were hungry and dinner was cooking,
And heavy the strap that was used by his sire,
The hired girl for fuel to him would be looking,
When empty the wo'dbox that stood by the fire—
The ghostly old woodbox, the fiend of a woodbox,
The hobgoblin woodbox that stood by the fire.

Most mem'ries old Time in his kindness will mellow,
As man becomes gray-haired and placid and old;
Forgotten the thrills of summer days yellow,
Forgotten the troubles of winter days cold;
But clear to the vision stands out the grim picture
Through life, and the memory still provokes mixture
Of grief for the youth and of wood for the fire—
The ghost of the woodbox, the old oaken woodbox,
The boy-haunting woodbox that stood by the fire.

ROMANCE OF THE ELEVEN.

Darnley was one of the foot ball team,
And he kicked in a match one day;
He kicked and kicked, but it did not seem
That he kicked in the proper way.

The captain's eye was upon the cup,
And Darnley caught his frown;
He first came in for a touch up,
Then he scored a neat touch down.

IT WILL COST YOU LESS MONEY to paint your house with Chilton Paint than any other kind. You will use fewer gallons of it than any paint ever made, for every shade is mixed and ground in pure linseed oil seven times, and therefore will cover more surface than a paint made in an ordinary way. Not only will it cover more, but it will last for years if it is applied to a dry surface. Never allow your painter to work over wet wood. You are sure to be disappointed. If the pores of the wood are filled with water the oil cannot enter. Better not have your house painted at all than to have it done badly. Sold by LeGro & Lynde, Palmer.

SHE WAS SURPRISED

So Will You Be When You Read It.

It Certainly Has Been a Source of Wonder and Comment.

But the Lady is Ready to Substantiate Everything.

CHARLESTOWN, MASS.—There has been in this place much wonder and comment of late in regard to a certain lady—a Mrs. Agnes S. Morton, who resides at 388 Main street, Charlestown, Mass. She was seen at her home and explained the whole interesting matter as follows:

"I do not know how to express myself to you and the public at large about this matter," she said, "but I feel it my bounden duty to say something.

"Everybody knows that I have been a great sufferer from dyspepsia for twenty-five years, and that I tried most everything and different doctors, but all were failures. I became so weak that I was unable to walk steadily, had no appetite, and what I did eat was the most simple kind of food; but my stomach was unable to retain even that.

"I could not sleep at night, had no ambition for anything, and was a total wreck. I knew I would have to do something, as I could not stand it many weeks longer. Why, I could not go up stairs without sitting down, and my heart would beat and I would be all of a tremble. I got a bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and had taken scarcely one-half of it when I began to have an appetite, and when I finished the remainder the trembling had left me, the palpitation was better and I could sleep nights. I took four bottles and then left off, to see if the great benefit I had received was permanent, for everything I had taken before had proved only temporary.

MRS. AGNES S. MORTON.

"But I found that it was not so in this case. I have not taken it now for some time and its results are just as good and permanent.

"I must tell you I am like a new person. I have an excellent appetite, can eat anything and everything, and I feel buoyant and ambitious.

"I cannot express half I want to, and all this is perfectly true, as all my friends and acquaintances are knowing to all the facts.

"I never expected to be cured, as my case had been of so long standing. I hoped for nothing more than relief for a while, but I am cured, perfectly cured. Yes, I do not hesitate to say that through the blessing of God and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy I am completely cured."

Such is the lady's remarkable story, and we doubt if such wonderful cures have ever before been made as are effected by this truly valuable discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy.

It is a fact that everybody needs a spring medicine, something to tone up and strengthen the nerves, invigorate the blood and start up a healthy action of the organs; and no medicine in the world so perfectly and completely does this as Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. It is the ideal spring invigorant and restorative.

All can secure its great benefits, as it is for sale by druggists for $1. It is, too, a purely vegetable and harmless medicine, the prescription, in fact, of the well-known successful specialist in nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 34 Temple place, Boston, Mass., who can be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

It Cures Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Croup, Influenza, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Asthma. A certain cure for Consumption in first stages, and a sure relief in advanced stages. Use at once. You will see the excellent effect after taking the first dose. Sold by dealers everywhere. Large bottles, 50 cents and $1.00.

Sand.

I observed a locomotive in the railroad yards one day,
It was waiting in the roundhouse, where the locomotives stay;
It was panting for the journey; it was coaled and fully manned,
And it had a box the fireman was filling full of sand.
It appears that locomotives cannot always get a grip
On their slender iron pavement, 'cause the wheels are apt to slip.
And when they reach a slippery spot their tactics they command,
And to get a grip upon the rail they sprinkle it with sand.
If your track is steep and hilly and you have a heavy grade,
And if those who've gone before you have the rails quite slippery made,
If you ever reach the summit of the upper tableland,
You'll find you'll have to do it with a liberal use of sand.
If you strike some frigid weather and discover to your cost
That you're liable to slip on a heavy coat of frost,
Then some prompt, decided action will be called into demand,
And you'll slip way to the bottom if you haven't any sand.
You can get to any station that is on life's schedule seen,
If there's fire beneath the boiler of ambition's strong machine,
And you'll reach a place called Flushtown at a rate of speed that's grand,
If for all the slippery places you've a good supply of sand.

DEACON BRACKETT'S PROPOSAL.

"Will, Will," cried Dolly, running in great haste down the lane one bright spring morning.

"Whoa! Good morning," said Will, pulling up the deacon's old horse, Steady, at the gate. "Much obliged to you, I'm sure, for coming down here to see me," as he waited.

"Don't tease, Will; I had a reason for coming, of course. Is Deacon Brackett at home to-day?"

"Yes, and likely to be for a while. He cut his foot yesterday, chopping up in the birch pasture."

"Is it a bad cut, Will?"

"No—that is, only a flesh wound, but it will confine him to the house for a week or two, I suppose. Are you coming over to see him?"

"No, of course not; but Aunt Serena wanted me to ask."

"Oh, then she's coming!" unwittingly hitting on the truth. "What can she be coming to see the deacon for?"

"Well," replied Dolly, "I suppose she wouldn't want anything said about it, but we heard the deacon wanted to sell the ten acre field, and Aunt Serena will pay as much for it as any one else can afford to. It joins her lot, you know, and she always said it ought to belong to the farm."

"So that's it," said Will; "didn't know, seeing it's leap year, but she might have some idea—"

"Nonsense! I wish she had, though. She said only this morning, jokingly, she'd a good mind to propose to the first single man she met, for hired help's worse than no help, and it will take all the crops she can raise to pay for raising them."

"That's about the case at home," exclaimed Will. "Mary Jane's mother's taken sick and sent for her this morning; I've just carried her to the depot, and deacon's lame, and that leaves him with no housekeeper."

"Dor-o-thy!" called her Aunt Serena from the door. "The clo'es are billin' an' the butter has come."

"And I'm coming! Good-by, Will!"

"Good-by, Dolly; I guess Miss Dame can buy the field."

Dolly ran into the house, and while her aunt stamped the golden balls of butter she deftly rinsed, wrung and hung the snowy clothes on the line.

"Aunt Serena," asked Dolly at dinner, just as her aunt poured out the second cup of tea, having noticed this was her most communicative time, "Deacon Brackett is a nice man, isn't he?"

"Law sakes, child, there ain't a better nowhere about. Savin' and a good calkilator; where you find one man his equal you'll find ninety-nine wus ones."

"So I thought," observed her niece. "I wonder why he never married?"

"I can't tell ye that, I'm sure. P'r'aps the deacon's a little too particular. 'Tain't every woman could suit him, brought up as he was."

"No, I don't know of but one, and that's you, Aunt Serena."

"Don't be foolish, Dorothy," said Miss Dame sharply. And Dolly, satisfied that her aunt would say nothing further on the subject, maintained a sagacious silence.

In the meantime Will hurried home, where he found the deacon lying on the lounge, groaning dismally with the pain in his foot and the general condition of the affairs.

"Did you get the liniment, William?" queried he, anxiously.

"Yes, sir; here it is. Shall I bathe your foot now?"

"No. You may loosen the bandage a bit, though, ef yer a mind tew. How on airth we're goin' tew git along till Mary Jane comes back is more'n I know.'

"Well," answered Will, after an inspection of the larder, "there's plenty of cold ham and three loaves of bread, and I can boil eggs and roast potatoes, so we shan't starve for awhile, I guess."

"Mebbe we might get brother John's widder a while."

"Can't," said Will promptly, "she isn't at home."

"Then it's no use going for her," groaned the deacon.

"Not a mite," replied Will. "By the way, when I came up by the Dame's place Dolly came down to the gate and said her Aunt Serena was coming over here this afternoon."

"Comin' here this arternoon?" echoed the deacon. "It's about that fencin', I s'pose."

"No," said Will, "I guess not—I think—I—that is,"—then, desperately, it's leap year, you know."

"And if 'tis?" queried the deacon, obtusely

"Nothing only—well, I heard Miss Dame said she'd a good mind to take advantage of it's being leap year. You see she's plagued about getting help and her farm does need a man to overlook it.,,

"William," said the deacon, blushing like a school girl, "you don't never mean—"

"I do, too," returned Will, not daring to meet the deacon's eye.

"Well, that beats all!"

But Will was already out of hearing, having gone to the woodshed, where he was alternately splitting wood and chuckling with laughter at the "good joke" he imagined he had on the deacon. For knew well the man's nature. Bashful to the last degree in the company of the opposite sex, the mere idea that Miss Serena might be coming with matrimonial intentions was enough to overwhelm him with confusion.

Meanwhile Miss Serena, having finished her dinner, though she'd "better set off at once, not thinking best," as she informed Dolly, "to give the deacon tew long a time to think it over and set his price."

So, from his window, the Deacon, who was nervously watching the road with a sinking heart, soon perceived Miss Serena steadily approaching. Indeed, had it not been for his lameness, I'm not sure but he would have taken ignominiously to flight. As it was he must "face the situation."

"How do ye dew, Deacon?" was Miss Serena's salutation, as she cordially shook his gingerly outstretched hand.

"Good afternoon, Miss Dame; won't ye hev a cheer?"

"Thank ye," said she, "I can't stop to set long, though I ain't in no great of a hurry, either, but seein' as I cum on bizness, I might as well cum tew the p'int!" The deacon winced, and Miss Serena, mistaking the expression for a spasm of pain, exclaimed: "Your foot's powerful bad; ain't it, deacon?"

"Considerable so," the deacon admitted.

"What air you usin' on it?" inquired Miss Serena.

"I've been wettin' it in this liniment William got to the village."

"'Pothecary stuff," said she s at it contemptuously; hev ye got any flowers in the house?"

The deacon thought thar might be somewhar, and, having procured this Serena "reck'ned she'd better layer bunnit and shawl and set 'em steep

"How long afore you expect M back?" asked she.

"I can't tell," said the deacon, mother's took down with sciatik and thar's no knowin' when she away."

"Well, you air unfortunit," exclaim Serena; "seein's I'm here I'll tidy up ye."

So, little thinking the words spoken in jest to her niece that reached the deacon's ear, she set to and soon restored the household wonted order.

"Thar now," said she, shaking pillows on the lounge; "seems to me be more comfortable here, deacon."

"Mebbe so," said he, hobbling along lounge, lying on which he mentally it had rested him just to see Miss work.

Then the deacon remembered that she called the best housekeeper for miles and that her butter and cheese always the premium at the county fair. To buy it must be hard for her to look after thing indoors and out.

"There ain't many women," thought deacon, "could 'a done as well as she h

"Now, deacon," said Miss Dame, ha as she expressed it, "straightened the out a bit," "you want to mix equal par alkyhol with the arniky when its ste enough and it'll be master good for your I'll warrant. Well, I declare," she went "in all the time I've been here I hain't my arrant yit. I've been thinking, dea seein' your land j'ined mine, ef wanted—"

"I do," interrupted the deacon: "W this place needs is a mistress, and ef you a mind tew cum—"

"What?" exclaimed Miss Serena.

"As Mrs. Deacon Brackett," he con

As this was the first offer Miss Sere had she behaved creditably, for she pro answered:—

"I'll cum, deacon."

So Miss Serena left the house when had lived so many years to pass the re ing ones at Deacon Brackett's as the de wife. But the Dame homestead wa long untenanted, for the next year Will a Dolly were married and moved there. B neither of them ever knew whether Aun Serena proposed to the deacon or the de con proposed to Aunt Serena.—Waverly Mag azine.

THE KIND THAT CURES

JOHN C. JEFFERIES, Worcester, Mass.

A Wonder in Worcester!

A Grateful Husband and Father Says of his Wife:

"Thank God, She is Well!"

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA IS CHEAPER, A $1.00 PER BOTTLE THAN ANY OTHER AS A GIFT BECAUSE IT IS "THE KIND THAT CURES."

DANA SARSAPARILLA CO.:

GENTLEMEN—DANA'S SARSAPARILLA has been such a Godsend that I must let others know. For the last 10 years my wife has had very poor health, complaining of severe headaches and bearing down pains, also pains in back and limbs. Her blood was so poor that it would appear to stagnate in blotches all over her limbs. She tried the different Sarsaparillas and was treated by Physicians in Mass., N. Y. and N. J., but found but little if any relief.

Five months ago I bought her a bottle of

DANA'S SARSAPARILLA

It helped her so much I bought three more, and it seems almost impossible to describe the change it has wrought. THE BLOTCHES HAVE DISAPPEARED, also the pains in side and limbs, no more bearing down pains or tired feeling. THANK GOD, she is a WELL woman to-day.

Hoping this may induce others to try it, I remain, Yours respectfully,

JOHN C. JEFFERIES.

175 Pleasant St., Worcester, Mass.

This is to certify that I sold Mr. Jeffries DANA'S SARSAPARILLA, and believe him to be an honest, truthful person, and do not believe he would make a false statement in regard to its merits. Yours respectfully,

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me." H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 1 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

And laid aside the linen clothes.

That His disciples might Him see
He went forth into Gallilee.
Waited then the angels there,
To comfort those who might repair
Unto the tomb and find Him gone;
And lo, the Mary's came at dawn.

Then to those mortals filled with fear,
The shining ones in love drew near;
"He is not here among the dead,
For He is risen as He said;
Come, see the place this very day
In which the Lord of glory lay."

There in the twilight of the tomb
They saw no Lenten lilies bloom,
But far beyond, all flowers bright,
Those angels radiant with delight,
Who filled the loving hearts forlorn
With holy joy that Easter morn.

These to the weeping women said:
"Why seek the living 'mong the dead?
The tomb is empty here, and lo,
Into Gallilee He now doth go.
To His disciples haste and tell
That He is risen and,—farewell!"

Joy to those faithful, feeble few;
Joy to the Gentile and the Jew;
Yes, joy to those believing Jews
Whose souls enkindle at the news;
Great joy to all of woman born—
The Saviour rose on Easter morn.

Come see the place where lay the snow,
The blade is green, the flowers blow;
There is sadness where there was gloom,
Blue violets in the valley bloom,
And in angelic light divine
The golden lilies dance and shine.

The lake that late was frozen o'er
Is fair as e'er it was before;
At rosy dawn and day's decline
It looks like water turned to wine;
And smiled upon by April sun
The streams and rills rejoicing run.

The buds on shrub and tree and bush,
Wooed by the winds begin to blush;
While in the woodland ways are seen
Young tender growths of virgin green;
These burst the barriers of the tomb,
And earnest are of leaf and bloom.

Northward now the bluebirds fly—
Their azure wings reflect the sky;
And on the robin's breast the dawn
Proclaims the night of winter gone;
These little angels sweetly sing
The resurrection of the Spring.

Shall mortal man then silent be,
Who with the eye of faith can see
The shining robes that sweep the sward,
The light around the risen Lord?
Ah, it were sin to silent be
When Christ appears in Gallilee.

O, souls that sleep, awake! awake!
Day in the East begins to break.
Arise from sin and sloth and gloom,
Meet Christ who cometh from the tomb;
Meet him as every mortal may
In faith and prayer this Easter Day!

MOSES TEGGART.

THE EYES OF THE WOLVES.

Two men and a woman; a great baronial room, furnished half in the English, half in the Oriental style; a wide, low divan, covered with rich brocade and heaped with many cushions; deer-skins everywhere—on the floor, the furniture, the low easy-chairs; a buffet crowded with massive silver; a huge stove of tiles and Dutch faience; beside it a square table covered with a cloth, upon which steams always the inevitable samover, surrounded by transparent cups and crystal glasses in holders of metal filagree; the walls hung with draperies of dark-red velvet, faded pastels and photographs, and a fox hunt in oil.

One of the men, wearing a brown velvet jacket and his feet in soft shoes, leans back in a deep easy-chair reading a newspaper. His hair has begun to whiten, but his brows are as black as his eyes, and his expression is one of bored weariness. The other—a young lieutenant in undress uniform, his opened coat showing beneath it a crimson silk shirt—paces back and forth with steps regular and firm. He is tall and robust, with blonde hair and mustache, and a frank smile on his somewhat full lips.

The lady, young also, and fair and delicate, her golden hair clasped in a loose knot low on her neck—reclines on the divan, lazily smoking a cigarette. She is in dark blue, her waist clasped by a silver belt studded with turquoise, her slim, white wrist encircled by a narrow band of plain, dull gold. Her eyes, bold and laughing, dilate from time to time with those fleeting gleams and shadows peculiar to the eyes of the feline race. Indolent and languid in repose, nervous and feverishly alive at the slightest movement, she is a singular mixture of vivacity and indifference, of softness and hardness, the scarlet curve of her rose-red lips announcing clearly an indomitable will.

Out of doors it is a night of clear metallic whiteness, the hoar-frost tracing even the window-panes with fantastic flowers. Within, all is warm and snug—a balmy atmosphere impregnated with tea-fumes, tobacco, and that subtle odor of tanned skins, the perfume of Russian leather.

The silence of the room for the moment is broken only by the rustle of the paper and the lieutenant's measured tread. Presently the lady yawns, rearranges her cushions, and begins to sip from a frail Japanese cup the smoking amber fluid. She is awake at last. The lieutenant turns, a flame like a ray of sunlight in a dark place in his brown eyes, and throws himself at her feet. She answers the gay caressing glance with a coquettish pout and a movement of the arm that makes the bracelet at her wrist ring like a bell.

"Prince," she says suddenly, addressing the reader in the chair by the smoking samovar, "what are we going to do to-morrow? What are your plans for us, prince, tell us!'"

"To beat the oak plantation," he answers tossing aside his paper. "The wolves, the peasants tell me, make nightly ravages there. Two nights ago it was a horse; yesterday a cow, killed so near daylight, too, that its body was still warm when they found it by the roadside."

"We shall hunt, then?" said Mme. Novar, with sparkling eyes.

"Yes, the dogs are in good shape, the hounds well-trained, and they ask nothing better than to sharpen their teeth on the wolves' hides."

"But it will freeze by to-morrow," the young officer objects—"freeze hard, at that; the moon has a haze around it."

"And what if it does freeze? asked the lady. "With my habit, toque, and seal gloves I can face any weather. Don't forget the champagne, prince."

"Have no fear, madame; all will be done as you desire."

Another long silence.

Mme. Novar suddenly springs from her cushions. Throwing back her head with a bird-like motion, her loosened hair lies half-uncoiled on her beautiful neck, her half-closed eyes open wide and eagerly.

"Listen—listen," says she; "I have an idea!" "What is it?" the lieutenant demands, admiration of her beauty sending the blood to his good-natured face in an ardent glow.

"I wish, absolutely, without delay, that we go to hunt now, at once, to hunt in sleighs—in a troika. Quick, prince, quick! Give the order. What snow! What moonlight! What life! Everything calls us! Quick—quick, I say, prince, let the horses be harnessed while I go to dress myself."

"My dear madame," the prince responds, hesitatingly, and rising stiffly from his chair, "with the greatest pleasure, but——"

"But what? What excuse are you seeking to find to keep us here in this downy nest, drinking tea, and tea, and tea? We shall turn into dried mummies. But see—see for yourself, prince," flying to the window and pulling back with feverish haste the heavy curtains, so that a wave of silvery moonlight floods the chamber, only half-lighted by the shaded lamps; "a perfect apotheosis of fiery brilliancy! How is it possible to remain at home on a night like this?"

"My dear madame," demurred the prince again, a note of coldness, if not displeasure, in his voice. "I must be frank; it is my duty to warn you that I am not sure of my team. The orders of a pretty woman are absolute; I have passed a lifetime submitting to them, but in a case like this all depends on the training and experience of the horses. If they run, or upset us, no earthly power can save us from the teeth of the wolves, if they chance to be numerous. My middle horse is perfect—a wise old trotter: nothing could alarm him—but the other horses? They are young—too young, madame; they arrived from the don only last spring, and are not yet sufficiently broken. They have hunted, it is true, but hunted mounted; it is not the same thing, and then, only in daylight. Wolves are thick these freezing nights, half-starving and not at all timid. Take the word of an old hunter, madame, and do not expose yourself——"

"You are jesting, my dear prince," Mme. Novar interrupts with a little, dry laugh; "or, perhaps, now I think of it, maybe you are afraid? Be careful, or you will compel me to believe that you are growing old—which would be truly a pity."

She speaks with such an accent of mingled provocation, sarcasm and defiance, and in her eyes there is such a mocking light, that the prince responds by ringing the bell.

A servant in Cossack dress answers the summons.

"Tell Timothy to harness Faust, Arabi, and Ares to the big hunting troika; Faust in the middle. Let Andre prepare the guns and the pig, and be ready in half an hour."

The little Cossack, with his shining buttons and rosy face, bows and goes out; the prince follows him. Left alone with her, the lieutenant, a troubled light in his eyes, approaches Mme. Novar.

"Dear madame," he begins, gently, "I am neither an old nor a cowardly man; but, nevertheless, I beg of you to give up this fancy. It is very tempting, I know, for a woman like you; but do not, I beseech you, compel your host to expose himself and his servants to a risk so terrible. For I give you my word that, with inexperienced horses, at this season of the year, when the wolves are most ferocious, it is a deadly danger to run. I entreat you not to insist. Our responsibility—"

"Thou, too, Serge!" cries Mme. Novar, with a burst of ringing laughter. "Away with fear! The more danger there is, the more one should feel one's self alive; the more sensations one has, the happier one should be."

The lieutenant answers her with a reproving gesture: "For one's self alone, yes; but for others?"

A big sleigh, in the shape of a half-ship, the horses harnessed to the prow, the coachman in front, in his usual place, waits now at the foot of the outer staircase; between the shafts a big black horse, its intelligent face surrounded by long, pointed ears, and lighted by large, brilliant eyes, stands patient and stolid between the Ukraine runners. The right-hand horse is gray, the left hand roan, both of them thin, sinewy, with flowing manes and tails.

Timothy, the coachman, with his strong face and eagle glance, perched up aloft, touches his cap to the prince as he slowly descends the steps, Mme. Novar on his arm. She, pale and frail, but smiling, is clad from head to foot in sealskin, her flashing eyes sparkling like flame through her veil, a light rifle flung carelessly over her shoulder. The lieutenant follows, with Andre bearing half a dozen guns.

A clear, silvery light floods everything, house and grounds. Each line of the harness, the guns, the eyes of the horses and of the men shine under it with extraordinary brilliancy, and seem to give back to it electric sparks. Mme. Novar runs across the terrace, which the marvelous witchery of snow and moonlight has turned to purest marble. She springs to the sleigh, the men quickly follow; at the same instant low grunts and squeals are heard under the furs. Andre flings himself down on the spot whence come the squeals to stifle the sound, and the horses are off at a gallop.

Fast as the run is, it is almost noiseless, the fall of the horses' hoofs on the soft snow scarcely perceptible. The bells have been removed from both sleigh and harness. Now and then the coachman's whistle resounds through the stillness like a bird's shrill call. Again, one of the horses sneezes. But ever in this arrowy rush they cross the swelling, undulating plains that stretch out like endless sheets of silver.

The plains once passed, they enter a stately wood, whose trees form lines, black and wavering, of limitless perceptive. Timothy halts at a crossroads; the vehicle stands out against the snow like a bit of ebony on a field of pearl. The firs, stirred by the wind moan and creek dismally, the boughs rub and grind each other with a dull, crunching sound. The horses snort; the smothered cries rise still from the bottom of the sleigh.

"Is it to be here, your excellency?" asks Timothy, quietly.

"How far are we from the Green Lake?" the prince responds.

"Nearly five miles; this road leads there direct, winds around the lake-edge, and loses itself in the steppe on its way to the high-road, which it joins near the post-station."

Mme. Novar, still impatient, interrupts with the order: "Make the pig cry!"

"It would be better to wait, I think," Andre replies. This road turns sharply out from here, and the ditches are deep; granting even that we are able to keep on the margin of the pond—"

"Peace, fool!" cries Mme. Novar; "do as you are bid!"

And instantly there sounds from the sleigh a hidden medley of squalls, squeals, and ear-splitting grunts, such as only a pig has power to utter, and whether bleeding to death or merely having his ear pulled, his gamut of notes is always the same. Mme. Novar smiles triumphantly; the lieutenant looks at her, then turns his eyes with a slight lift of the shoulder.

All at once the horses rear. Timothy braces himself like a rock in his seat. The edge of the forest glows now with a line of fiery sparks, greenish and changeful—the phosphorescent eyeballs of the wolves' advance guard, fleeing and skulking, but always returning with stubborn obstinacy towards the sleigh and its tempting freight. Timothy loosens the reins, and the middle horse starts off with the long, swinging stride, trotting steadily, without haste or spurts, and always restraining [illegible] does not understand him; she is a woman and hard to convince, and she speaks again with a tender inflection:

"How strangely you speak, Serge. It was Marta—did you know that, Serge—Marta you called me during our peril," she adds, with a silvery laugh.

"For the first time and the last time, madame," the lieutenant returns, gravely. "Faust has broken that which bound me to my dearest desire. True courage is always admirable. I would see any woman brave peril coolly and would commend the effort; in like proportion would I despise her did her caprice endanger the life even of a dog. How, then, judge one whose willful fancy exposes human lives to the cruellest danger? Men are not allowed, as you know, to draw back from a daring—even a foolhardy undertaking—a silly bondage imposed upon self-esteem. Therefore, a woman who abuses her privileges, who presumes upon this sentiment and knowledge, is neither more nor less than a murderess—a murderess with premeditation; and a woman, be her station what it may, without tenderness, is, in my opinion, a monster.

"For that reason, madame, permit me to congratulate you on the happy outcome of your whim and bid you—farewell."—Translated for the Argonaut from the Russian of Tola Dorian by E. C. Waggener.

THE DOLEFUL WOMAN.

Do you know the doleful person? She, for the doleful person is always a woman, is always a good neighbor in health, and tries to be neighborly in sickness. But she makes a miserable failure at the latter. You know how she acts.

Don't you remember the last time the baby was sick? After you had watched by the little one's bed day after day and night after night; had watched the roses fade from the loved one's cheeks and saw the little form waste away? And don't you remember that just about the time you had given up hope the doleful neighbor came in? And don't you remember how she started to cheer you up with a one-sided conversation, something like this:

"Why, Mrs. B——, how much worse the baby looks this morning. She looks just like Sarah Jones's baby did the night before it died. Gracious! I never saw a child so wasted away as Sarah's was, except yours. We just done everything for this child, but it wa'n't no use. I never will forget how Sarah took on at the funeral."

And then the doleful neighbor suddenly remembers that she has to run back to "set a sponge," and when she goes you hope she will never return. You look again at the suffering babe and feel that your heart must surely break. But suddenly there is a knock at the door and in comes the—well, sunbeam neighbor is as good as any. She was over the evening before and quietly and unobtrusively helped to do so many helpful things, and when she left she left a word of cheer. And when she comes this time she says something like this:—

"Why, how much better the baby looks this morning!"

And don't you remember what a bright gleam of hope crossed your mind?

"I never saw a child improve so much in so short a time before. I am sure the baby will soon be well."

And then the sunbeam neighbor rearranges the bed, adjusts the blinds, and tells you she will call again in a few hours, and hurries home. Honest, now, didn't she leave a confident feeling behind her? You felt better and more hopeful. Baby even seemed to rally under the words, and when at last the little one was playing around your knee again, didn't you think of the words of the sunbeam neighbor?

The doleful neighbor has frightened more mothers to death, buried more babies and caused more tears than all the plagues combined. She should be suppressed.—Omaha World-Herald.

TO DOUBLE THE BUTTER YIELD.

While I am not an old butter-maker, I have had some experience in that line from my youth up. A friend recently informed me that black pepsin would greatly increase the yield of butter, and had our druggist order some. She was very sanguine of success, and invited me to see the marvelous results. She churned two gallons the usual way and had four pounds, three ounces of butter; she then churned two gallons with black pepsin, but only had four pounds seven ounces of butter. She at once pronounced it a humbug. I noticed the buttermilk was full of small particles of butter not gathered, and called her attention to it, but she claimed she had followed directions to the letter, and as the result was not what she had expected, it was a failure.

I asked her to let me take some pepsin home, and the next day I churned, but the result was the same as with my friend—no increase of butter, but the richest buttermilk I ever saw. The next day I churned more slowly after it began to break, and had nine pounds, 13 ounces of nice butter from two gallons of cream. Two gallons churned the old way had made but four pounds, seven ounces of butter. I have used black pepsin ever since with complete success. A teaspoonful of black pepsin to each gallon of cream will combine in the form of butter all the cheese, butter and sugar that the milk contains, and you will have more than twice as much good butter.

Over half the healthful solids in milk are thrown away in the buttermilk by the old way of churning. The butter looks, tastes, keeps and sells better than common butter. Here in Nebraska our markets are poor, but being able to double the increase of butter by using pepsin I can make money at our prices, but back home in the East this system of butter-making should be a fortune to any farmer, and will certainly pay to try it. Have patience enough to learn; do not think you can double the income of your cows with out any thought or experience; but a week should enable you to more than double the yield of butter without additional expense or labor.—New York Herald.

HIS RELATIONSHIP.—The friends of the middle-aged bachelor couldn't for the life of them tell whether he was after the buxom widow of 40 or her pretty daughter of 20, so very devoted was he to each of them. At last their curiosity overcame them and one approached him on the subject.

"Come," said the questioner, "we want to know what you are going to do in this matter. Will you be stepfather to the daughter or son-in-law to the mother?"

"Neither," he replied good-naturedly. "I'm going to be uncle to the daughter."

"What's that? You're not going to marry the girl's aunt?"

"No, not that I am aware of," he said, with a faint gleam of hope, "but her mother has promised to be a sister to me."—Detroit Free Press.

AN OLD MAN'S GALLANTRY.—Of famous compliments paid to the fair sex the supply is so large and dazzling that it is a matter of no small difficulty to pick out the brightest gems; but if the following was unlooked for it certainly deserves a place among the best. Fontenelle, when 90 years old, passed before Mme. Helvetius without perceiving her. "Ah!" said the lady, that is your gallantry, then! To pass before me without even looking at me!" "If I had looked at you, madame," replied the old beau, "I never could have passed you at all."

Repairs and alterations are being made at the parsonage of the Congregational church, preparing the building for the occupancy of the new pastor. A bath room is being constructed in the upper story, and the building piped for hot and cold water. Hitchcock & Blanchard are doing the work.

The public should remember that the drama "Placer Gold" will be given at the opera house next Tuesday evening by a strong local cast. As the proceeds are to benefit the whole community it is hoped that a large audience will be present. Tickets went on sale at Allen's drug store this morning.

Three drunks were before the district court Monday and were probated until April 29th. Not even a small portion of the Saturday crop was gathered in, or the lockup would have been much to small to accommodate the harvest. It has been a long time since so many intoxicated persons have been seen on the street as were visible Saturday.

Home from school for the Easter vacation:—Miss Alice Brown, Misses Mabel and Nellie Smith from Mt. Holyoke; Miss Gertrude Ball and Miss Genevera Clark from Smith College; Miss Carrie Tuthill from Andover; W. E. and J. E. Breckenridge from Yale; J. Howard Willis from Williams; Granger Clark from Cornell.

C. G. Harrison, who has been clerk in the post office for four and a half years, has resigned that position and accepted one with the Boston and Albany railroad. He will be employed in the freight house a part of the day, and in the evening will have charge of the ticket office in the passenger station, relieving A. L. Hills, the day clerk, a[illegible] next,

The new stamped envelopes have arrived at the post office, and if the department had tried to invent a homely design for the two-cent stamp it couldn't have succeeded better than in the one which has been adopted. The sale of these envelopes will never be very large, for the design of the stamp is enough to prejudice almost any one against them.

The annual meeting of St. Paul's Universalist parish was held Monday evening, W. W. Leach being moderator. These officers were chosen: Clerk, William Merriam; executive committee, C. E. Getchell, A. H. Willis, E. P. Ball; tresaurer, W. E. Stone; ushers, E. E. Brooks and George Sumner. The treasurer reported all bills paid and a balance in the treasury. An adjournment was taken for two weeks from Tuesday evening.

Chief Engineer Hitchcock of the fire department slept with one eye open Tuesday and Wednesday nights for fear there might be an alarm. The fire alarm telegraph was out of order and the fault could not be located until late yesterday afternoon, when it was found that there was a ground at the box on the corner of Main and Walnut streets, a break in the connection on South Main street, and a telegraph wire across the wires of the system in another place.

Those who are interested in cemetery matters in this village should remember the meeting called for next Thursday evening at the court room for the purpose of organizing a cemetery association. Such an organization is extremely desirable, as it can receive bequests and donations for the care of lots, which the town will not do. Proxies have been printed, and those having rights in the ground who cannot be at the meeting can be represented by a proxy, to be had of O. P. Allen.

The shoe store of E. Goodes on the corner of Main and Thorndike streets was broken into about three o'clock last Saturday morning, the thieves obtaining an entrance by cutting out a pane of glass in a rear window, the job evidently being done with a diamond or glass cutter, for the hole was smooth and round. Mrs. Letters, who lives over the store, heard the crash of the glass when it fell, but paid no attention to the matter, and nothing was known of the burglary until the proprietor came to the store in the morning. The haul was not great, only 25 cents in cash being secured, and a few pairs of shoes.

William Ely, who lives with his son, George W. Ely, at Overlook Farm west of the village, wandered away from his home Sunday afternoon and made his way across the mountain to the farm of H. A. Rindge near the Monson quarry. The distance was about three miles, and Mr. Ely had only a pair of slippers on his feet. He was recognized by Mr. Rindge, who cared for him and returned him to his home. It is probable that the death of his wife a few weeks ago may have unbalanced his mind and rendered him not wholly responsible for his actions. While on his way he had a narrow escape from death on the railroad tracks, being removed just in time to escape a passing train.

A grand anniversary entertainment will be given under the auspices of the Firemen's Relief Association at the opera house April 26th. It is expected that Col. Russell H. Conwell, the famous orator, Miss Lillian Pierce, the well-known elocutionist, the Philharmonic Orchestra of nine pieces, and other talent, will appear. As usual with this organization, a social hop will follow the entertainment. The association desires to be represented at the World's Fair, and proposes to present a round-trip ticket to the most popular patron as decided by voting coupons attached to the admission tickets. A subscription sale of tickets will soon be announced, with full particulars.

The trustees of the Palmer Savings Bank met Monday afternoon to act upon Treasurer Moore's resignation, which was finally laid upon the table, and the trustees adjourned for two weeks, after appointing the following committee to receive applications for the position of treasurer: C. L. Gardner, H. G. Loomis, H. P. Holden, C. H. Hobbs and R. C. Newell. It is understood that a number of applications have been received already. As stated in these columns last week there are several local aspirants for the place, who feel that home talent should be given the preference, but it still seems probable that the trustees will select for this responsible position somebody who has had experience in banking.
